Soule's Commercial College,

CORNER OF CAMP AND COMMON STS., (STORY BUILDING,) NEW ORLEANS.

The Commercial Athenæum of the South.

Founded in 1850.....Chartered in 1861.

This is a full-course BUSINESS COLLEGE, complete in all its departments. It is conducted by progressive minds, and as the daily cycles of time roll by the increased wisdom, the improvements and the superior facilities of the age are combined and used to meet the demands of the rising business generation and advance the interests of its patrons.

It is located in the Athens of the great Southwest, and is emphatically the Commercial Athenæum of the South.

It possesses a commercial library, numerous counting rooms and lecture halls, and a proficient and well-appointed faculty. Stores and banks are connected, business regularly transacted, daily lectures given, and all branches practically, scientifically and philosophically taught.

The curriculum of studies is specially arranged to meet the wants of the planter, mechanic and professional man, as well as the merchant and banker. All branches of a thorough English education are taught, and also the higher mathematics, the French, Spanish and German languages.

Ninety-five premiums, gold and silver medals, diplomas, money prizes, silver plate, etc., attest the superior merits of this institution.

Tuition fees low, and scholarships good in thirty-six colleges.

By reason of the ability and fidelity of the principal and instructors of this institution, and its many truly superior advantages, it has gained an unsurpassed popularity, and through nearly sixteen years of prosperous business it has enjoyed the almost unbounded confidence of the business community.

For circulars call at the College office, or address GEO. SOULE, Principal.

N. B.—Soule's Analytic and Philosophic Commercial and Exchange Calculator (880 octavo pages,) the great arithmetical work of the age and which no student, teacher, accountant or business man should be without, is for sale at principal stationers and at the office of Soule's Commercial College. oc17 1m

THIRD EDITION.

GOD WITH US,

Or the Person and Work of Christ, with an Examination of the "Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr. Bushnell. By Alvah Hovey, D. D., president of Newton Theological Seminary. 12mo. cloth, $1.50.

CONTENTS.—Part I.—The Person of Christ. The Deity of Christ. The Humanity of Christ. The Unity of Christ.

Part II.—The Atonement as Related to God. The Atonement as Related to Man.

Part III.—"The Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr Bushnell. The Fundamental Principles of the Work. The Interpretation of the Language of Scripture, etc.

A thorough, interesting and very timely work.

Dr. W. R. Williams, of New York, writes to the publishers:

"I have read carefully throughout the work of Dr. Hovey, 'God With Us.' It seems to me a clear, succinct and admirably cogent book; well timed, and not easily answered."

Dr. Caldwell, of Providence, Rhode Island, writes:

"I have just been reading Dr. Hovey's 'God With Us,' and with the greatest interest. The treatment of the subject is very fair, just, clear, and will relieve many minds obscured by speculations on the subject. The style is remarkably vivid and animated for a theological treatise. It is the best of Dr. Hovey's works."

A CHOICE BOOK.—SECOND EDITION.

IN CHRIST,

Or the Believer's Union with his Lord. By Rev. A. J. Gordon, pastor of the Clarendon Street Church, Boston. 12mo. cloth, $1.50.

A volume full of the "seeds of things," fresh, vigorous and instructive. To those "looking into Jesus" this volume will be intensely interesting, and prove refreshing as "water to a thirsty soul."

The Sunday Courier says: "This book comes well up to its divine theme. We do not remember, since Thomas a'Kempis, a book so thoroughly imbued with great personal love of Christ, and such longing desire to bring men into like love of our Lord and Master as this. * * * This book has, beside its spiritual beauty, great literary merit. It is written in that full, rich old style which once was common among good divines, but now is unhappily so rare anywhere."

The Boston Globe says: "It is really a book of 'vital' religion, and which is at the same time 'sound' in doctrine. We make the distinction, because doctrinal soundness is often accompanied with spiritual dryness. Mr. Gordon is all alive. He is intensely 'orthodox,' but he is also intensely human. As a writer he is both fervid and polished."

DR. D. JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE

WILL

BUILD UP THE SYSTEM,

PURIFY THE BLOOD,

AND

EXCITE THE ABSORBENTS TO

HEALTHY ACTION.

DR. D. JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE

IS A STANDARD MEDICINE:

a compound of those articles which long experience has proven to possess the most safe and efficient alterative and deobstruent properties, and containing no concealed poisons, no mercurial or other metallic preparations. Having before us the testimonials of thousands of persons who have been restored to sound health from its use, it is recommended to the afflicted with entire confidence as to its ability to effectually eradicate from the human system the diseases for whose cure it is designed.

For Purifying the Blood

the Alterative will be found to be a most effective medicine. Acting directly on the circulation, it purifies the blood, and passes with it into every tissue and fiber of the body, removing every particle of disease from the system.

FOR SCROFULA IN ALL ITS FORMS,

whether Ulcerations of the Flesh or Bones, Enlargement of the Joints, Glands, Swellings, Eruptions, Tumors, etc., the Alterative has been found pre-eminently successful. By its action on the blood it destroys the virus or poisonous principle from which these diseases originate.

FOR SKIN DISEASES,

the immediate cause of which will always be found to be an obstructed state of the pores, JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE is a certain remedy. It not only removes the obstinate state of the pores, but it frees the blood and perspiration from all impurities and gross particles, which are so liable to obstruct the small perspiratory organs.

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloody streaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh.
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head.
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 30.—Mrs. Horace Greeley died this morning at the residence of Mr. Alvin Johnson. During the evening yesterday her symptoms were of such a favorable character as to inspire some faint hope of her recovery. Such expectations, however, proved unfounded, as she had two chills during the night; after which she was very easy until she ceased to breathe, at four A. M., passing away peacefully, without any perceptible struggle. The funeral will take place at twelve o'clock on Friday.

St. Louis, Oct. 30.—The Republican published a brief correspondence this morning from Texas, under date of October 27, in which it reports that the Indians had made a raid into Hood and Parker counties, on the Brazos river, killing one woman and wounding several other persons. Part of the Indians still remained in Texas, and the citizens were organizing for the purpose of driving them out.

Key West, Oct. 30.—The steamer Anna, which arrived here at half-past three this evening from Nassau, brought the intelligence of the burning of the steamship Missouri, en route from New York for Havana. She left New York on the seventeenth instant, and burned off Abaco. It is reported that over eighty lives were lost. Only twelve are known to be saved. Captain Curtis and crew are said to be among those who perished.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—The horse disease has now fairly established itself here. There are now between six and seven hundred cases reported. Business is beginning to suffer.

Clevelann, Ohio, Oct. 31.—The horse disease continues to spread here, and all the street railroad lines but one have discontinued.

Ithica, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Froude concluded his course of lectures in Cornell University to-night. The students honored the distinguished lecturer with a torchlight procession, and a member of the senior class delivered an address, to which Froude responded.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 2.—An apostate and backsliding Mormon organization has been formed here, called the Utah Liberating League. It is taking strong hold on the people, and is spreading rapidly. Its efforts are directed against the power of the priesthood of the Mormon Church.

Springfield, Mass., Nov. 3.—Chan Lai Sun, Chinese imperial commissioner of education, and wife to-day joined the South Congregational church in this city.

Charleston, Nov. 4.—The horse malady has appeared here. A majority of the horses and mules are more or less affected.

Washington, Nov. 5.—It is claimed at the White House, where they have dispatches from every State, Grant will have 270 electoral votes.

The Cincinnati Gazette telegraphs Ohio has gone Republican by 25,000 majority, and Indiana is sure for Grant.

Wheelino, W. Va., Nov. 5—Meager returns, thus far received, indicate that West Virginia has gone for Grant.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 5.—It will require official count to decide between Wise and Smith for Congress. Stowell and Platt are undoubtedly elected to Congress. Fifth district in doubt. The remaining five districts elect Democrats. The State is conceded to Greeley by 5,000.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 5.—A Des Moines, Iowa, dispatch says the indications are that Grant has carried Iowa by 30,000 majority. The Republicans elect a full congressional delegation.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 5.—Returns from the State, so far as heard from, indicate a light vote compared with the last gubernatorial election. The Republican vote is generally full. The white Democratic vote shows a falling off of fully twenty-five per cent. Greeley's majority in the State is probably less than 10,000.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 5.—Governor Brown is re-elected. Greeley will carry the State, but by a diminished majority. Decisive returns will not be received before to-morrow.

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 5.—All the principal towns in the State give Greeley a majority of 2,000. A number of counties will be thrown out, however; but even with those to hear from the result will be in Greeley's favor.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 5.—Greeley carries Georgia by 20,000. All Democratic Congressmen are elected.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 5.—Grant has carried the State by a heavy majority. The white vote is very light.

New York, Nov. 6, 3 A. M.—The World's estimate at midnight is that all the old Northern States, with South Carolina and Mississippi, in all 253 electoral votes, have declared for Grant, leaving 113 electoral votes, all from the Southern States, for Greeley.

Grant will have at least 40,000 majority in the State of New York, Greeley running behind Kernan and the State ticket at least 15,000 votes. The Liberal gains in the rural districts of Republican counties are more than compensated for by Grant's gains in the cities of the State.

Philadelphia, Nov. 6, 3 A. M.—Grant's majority in Pennsylvania, 90,000 to 100,000.

Indianapolis, Inn., Nov. 6, 2.30 A. M.—Two hundred and seventy-five towns give a net Republican gain of 9,083. Republican majority in this city and county over 2,000, a Republican gain of 1,100. Republican majority in the State will not be less than 20,000.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6, 3 A. M. All returns indicate that the State has gone for Greeley by 5,000 majority.

FOREIGN.

Berlin, Oct. 30.—The cholera has broken out in Gumbennin, eastern Prussia. Several fatal cases have occurred.

Buda, Hungary, Oct. 30.—The cholera is making serious ravages here. Ninety-four cases are reported, of which twenty-seven have proved fatal. Among the cases are those of twenty-nine soldiers, who were stricken ill simultaneously, and of whom five have died.

Rome, Oct. 31.—Dispatches from Turin report no abatement of the floods caused by the overflow of the river Po. Over four thousand men are at work day and night erecting barriers to arrest the further progress of the water. Damages to property and crops in the provinces of Mantua and Ferrara are beyond calculation. Assistance is being rapidly forwarded from all points.

Turin, Nov. 1.—The flood of the Po continues. The people are starving on house-tops and in trees. The streams are filled with carcasses and wrecks of houses.

The town of Regie, fourteen miles from Medino, has almost disappeared beneath the flood.

London, Nov. 3.—The horse disease has appeared in several places in Devonshire; especially severe in Tiverton and vicinity.

London, Nov. 4.—France pays Germany two hundred million francs this week, and makes a similar weekly installment till the first of the year, when only two milliard francs of the war indemnity will remain unpaid.

MY ANGEL-BOY.

BY A MOTHER.

To the shining shores of glory
They have borne my beautiful boy,
Where he sings the wondrous story
Of love forever, evermore.

A strange fluttering of wings, a mysterious sound of song, and a shining cherub-throng soared from the burnished portals of glory to earth and caught my beautiful babe upon their snowy pinions, and peacefully wafted his pure spirit to the pearly gates of heaven, where the Savior safe folded him in his bosom, safe, forever safe, while the angel-choirs touched so loud their harps and sang so sweet their songs that all heaven re-echoed with the joy.

He was spotless and pure, and God took him thus before earth's sins and sorrows had stained his snowy robes.

Life's throbbings had just begun to beat their march, and they were hushed while yet the morn had scarcely dawned. His sun had but risen from the river waves of Time ere it peacefully set on earth, and arose in the city wherein is no night.

The tiny bud was just unfolding, and God plucked it from earth's cold soil and transplanted it, a fadeless floweret, in the garden of glory to bloom eternally. His voice had only begun its first lispings on earth when it was hushed, and only hushed to chant in sweeter melody amid the angel choirs.

The delicate clay casket was too frail for the precious jewel it enveloped. God saw it was a treasure that was wanting to beautify more perfectly the heavenly, if could be.

O, my beautiful angel boy has really crossed the silvery tide that so beautifully links earth to heaven, while I am left weeping on the shore

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. M. Steel, writing from Harrisburg, Arkansas, October 16, says:

Our country is much embarrassed at present, and but few papers are taken. The family paper should be last given up; but it is not so. A fine dress for the daughter is thought of much more value than the family paper. We are having fine revivals; many accessions in my bounds. We will report a handsome increase this year. Our crops are greatly damaged by the dry weather. Corn and cotton are both very short, and our people much involved pecuniarily.

Oak Hill Circuit, Alabama Conference.—Mr. Editor: I desire to say to the many friends of Zion, through the Advocate, that the Lord has graciously revived his work on the Oak Hill circuit, Alabama Conference. At our third quarterly meeting, at the McKenzie church, we commenced our round of protracted meetings. Here we had a gracious time. The church was greatly revived; about sixteen conversions and ten additions to the church. Our next was at Canaan. Here the Lord also blessed our labors; several conversions and seven joined the church. At Bethlehem we commenced our meeting on Saturday before the first Sabbath in October, which lasted until the second Sabbath. The Lord was in his temple from the commencement. Old sinners were awakened, several of whom are now members of the church. We closed with twenty-seven additions to the church, and we know not how many conversions. The Lord be praised for his goodness and mercy.

J. M. Johnston.

Oak Hill, Oct. 25, 1872.

Union Springs District, Alabama Conference.—Mr. Editor: It is with pleasure that I furnish you a few items from this portion of our Zion, and I will notice, first,

OUR DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

This was held in Troy, Alabama, commencing July 31. We had no Bishop in attendance, although the most vigilant efforts had been made to secure the presence and services of one.

The pastors, with one exception, were all present, together with twelve local preachers and forty-eight laymen, making in all seventy-four members, every charge being represented. W. C. Menefee was elected secretary and M. B. Honghton assistant. We had as visitors Revs. A. S. Andrews, D. D., and F. L. B. Shaver; besides, a number of leading laymen were present who were not members of the body.

The business proceedings were of a highly interesting character, and the religious exercises, embracing preaching, prayer meetings, a love-feast, etc., were after the true Methodistic style, and greatly refreshing and profitable. These exercises were continued two weeks after the business closed, and more than fifty souls were converted, and forty-eight members were added to our church.

The following were elected to the Annual Conference: Delegates—Isaac H. Parks, of Rutledge, W. W. Wilkinson, of Greenville, E. B. Wilkerson, of Troy, and R. H. Powell, of Union Springs. Reserves—W. C. Menefee, of Orion, F. Law, of Chunenuggee, J. R. Rogers, of Union Springs, and Rev. E. Williams, of Brundidge.

Since the District Conference protracted exercises have been held on nearly all the charges, and quite a number have experienced converting grace, and have been brought into the communion of the church.

One item of special interest I wish to chronicle is

THE HILL'S CHAPEL CAMP MEETING.

This was held on the Olustee circuit, in Montgomery county, but adjacent to the Pine Level and Rocky Mount circuits. The Rev. W. A. Sampey was the prime mover in getting up this meeting, by whose indefatigable and persistent labors, aided by others, the camp ground was established. An elegant and substantial shed, seventy-two by sixty feet, was erected, and there were ten good plank, and as many cloth tents, besides the preachers' tent, which was of plank. The meeting commenced on Friday night, September 20, and continued until Wednesday morning, the twenty-fifth. We had a good congregation all the time. On Sunday there were at the lowest estimate three thousand persons. Some thought the number would reach four thousand. There were twelve preachers of our church, three of the Methodist Protestant, five of the Baptist and one of the Christian (or Campbellite,) besides two or three colored preachers. The preaching and all the exercises were after the true camp meeting style, and were owned and blessed of God to the edification of his people and the conversion of souls. There were over fifty persons brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and twenty-five were received into the church; but these figures do not fully indicate the amount of good accomplished, for the influence was powerful and outreaching. The people were largely imbued with the camp meeting spirit, and the tenters held a meeting, and resolved to make this meeting a permanent thing. The next is to embrace the second Sunday in October, 1873.

Notwithstanding the presence in our district of that old, troublesome companion of Methodist preachers and Methodist people, "hard times," we hope to be able to bring up our finances above the minimum.

We are doing something in the district in erecting church buildings. Six new houses of worship are going up. On the Greenville station an elegant and commodious brick church will soon be completed. On the Greenville, Rutledge, Troy, Brundidge and Elba circuits neat and comfortable frame buildings are going up.

And last, but by no means least, the Sunday school interest on the district is not neglected. The district, the quarterly and the church conferences have carefully considered the subject of providing for the wants of the children of the church, and preachers and laymen are laboring very cheerfully and successfully in this department.

J. W. Shores.

Troy, Ala., October 15, 1872.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: Having just looked in upon this institution, I ask space to give your readers the results of my observations.

Tuskegee, in which the college is located, is forty miles east of Montgomery, near the Western railroad, with which it is connected at Chehaw by a narrow-gauge in successful operation. Did you ever, Mr. Editor, see a narrow-gauge road? One is disposed, on first sight, to shake his head and say: That will not do. But when he finds himself comfortably seated with thirty or forty passengers, and sees hitched on several freight boxes heavily laden, and speeds off with as much steadiness and safety as is obtained on our first-class wide-gauges, and at near the same rate of travel, he is ready not only to vote the narrow-gauge a success, but also to paint a bright picture of that good time coming when our people shall cut loose from the one-idea policy of cotton-making to impoverish themselves and enrich their foes, and shall turn their capital to the development of internal resources by carrying into every settlement these cheap feeders of our commercial thoroughfares and promoters of individual wealth. Tuskegee is on an elevated plateau. The city is beautiful, the atmosphere is pure, water excellent, health good, society moral and highly cultivated. It would be hard to find a place in the South having a more happy combination of circumstances in its favor as an educating point. The college is the property of the Alabama Conference. The building is said to be the most imposing and best arranged female college building in the State. The apparatus and fixtures are complete. The grounds are retired and beautifully arranged. In these particulars nothing is wanting to make it a desire and a joy to all who have daughters to educate.

But what of the new organization? It is to answer this question that I have taken pen in hand. After having taken pains to learn the methods of instruction, the disciplinary management, and the opinion entertained of the school by the local patronage, I am prepared to say, without intruding any invidious comparison, that the college has lost nothing by the change that has recently taken place in the presidency. The present incumbent, Rev. Henry D. Moore, formerly president of Levert Female College, has already shown himself a master in the art of female education. His theory, as he presents it, is more in keeping with the wants of the age and condition of Southern society than that of some educators. He holds that woman has a nobler mission in the great world than to flourish a few showy accomplishments in the parlor; that the good of Southern civilization requires that our women be felt more positively than ever before in working out the great social problems of the age. Not as shriekers of political dogmas and theories of social reform, so called, on the hustings, nor as joint electors with the ignorance and corruption which are crushing out the liberties of our country; but by the conservative and purifying power which educated woman, in her heaven-appointed sphere, can alone exert. To give to his pupils that strength of character which results from thorough education is his chief aim, while he would add also the ornamental branches to set off this background in all the loveliest hues of cultivated womanhood. Bro. Moore deserves success—has succeeded elsewhere, and will succeed, when better known in Alabama, in giving to this college a higher and more permanent prosperity as a Conference school than it has ever had.

Working with him is a corps of teachers well qualified for their responsible position. In the literary department are Misses Barker, Hendru, Nall and Dor Roulack. These ladies, wherever they have taught, have won golden opinions from all in a situation to judge of their merits. The primary department is in the charge of Mrs. Johnson, who seems to have solved the difficult problem how, in the spirit of kindness, to reduce this department in a female college to order, and lay the foundation for studious habits and thorough training in the college course. The department of music is under the direction of Prof. Herz, an Englishman by birth, and a gentleman of high culture and rare professional accomplishments. As a performer on several instruments he is said to be equaled by few, and is also emphatically a teacher of music. Under his direction this department, always maintaining a very high standard in this college, has struck out for something higher than it has yet reached.

If I am correctly informed, this was the first female college south of Baltimore to introduce a separate department of art design. It has sent forth several teachers of art who already rank high. The pupils of this department have been competing successfully for premiums at Georgia and Alabama fairs. The teacher, Miss Sinclair, a graduate of the college, and also of the department over which she has for several years presided, has the enthusiasm which, when joined to talent such as hers, will insure success. One must be destitute of the sentiment that gives to life its sweetest charms if he feels no thrill of pleasure on entering her department. Here are a score or more of the Almighty's loveliest specimens of creative skill heading to the easel, and bringing out from the canvas ideals of beauty. On casting the eyes around upon the specimens, a stranger detects in his feelings a suspicion of foul play—he begins to doubt if he is looking upon school-girl art. But as he passes from easel to easel, and sees the work going silently on—here the outlines assuming the most accurate form under the pencil; there the shading and blending in of the half-executed work; yonder a specimen of art, fit to grace a palace wall, receiving the last delicate strokes of the brush—all doubt yields to ocular demonstration, and the question starts in the mind: Why not the sunny South rival Italy as the home of the fine arts, as well as in the loveliness of her clime? There is genius, and it only requires painstaking culture and the encouragement of our appreciating public to make our land immortal as the home of music, painting and sculpture, as her sons have already made her for oratory and deeds of noble daring.

I am thoroughly satisfied that those who send their daughters further than Tuskegee Female College to be educated get nothing better than they can obtain here, except, it may be, the groundless eclat of sending a long way from home.

This is the way the new temperance law lately inaugurated in Connectient works in Illinois. The following is now common in Illinois papers:

"Notice.—All women who do not wish their husbands to frequent my house, for the purpose of drinking, will oblige me by leaving a note at the postoffice, Box 83. (Signed) ——"

He that would make a real progress in knowledge must dedicate his age as well as youth, the latter growth as well as the first fruits, on the altar of truth.—Berkeley.

THAT DISCLAIMER.

In reference to the matter of the following letter from our brother, Rev. William Shepherd, it may be allowable for the editor to explain that the word "transfer" was not probably used in its technical sense current in our church economy, and that the object of the disclaimer was to guard against any apparent approval or indorsement of Bro. Shepherd's course. The reference to Bishop Keener and Dr. Tudor, as they thought, might be so construed, though at the same time this result, as it seems, was not intended by Bro. Shepherd himself. It did not occur to us that such a construction could be fairly put upon the allusion to those brethren, or to the editor of the Advocate; but such a misapprehension was possible.—Ed. Advocate.

Mr. Editor: I was exceedingly surprised to see, in your paper of October 17, a "Disclaimer" from Bishop Keener and Dr. Tudor. I have shown it to several ministers of good standing, and I will not write the opinion they expressed in reference to it.

1. I am charged with having invited the transfer of English preachers to this country. This I deny. I had too much sense to write for a thing which I knew the English Conference had no power to do; besides, I did not mention the preachers in connection with the Conference, but local preachers, who are voluntary agents. After speaking of our church progress, the language I used was: "All that we need to push on our victories to complete success is men. And yet in England there are young men whose soul is on fire with the gospel of the grace of God, and who are ready to spend their lives in crying: 'Behold, behold the Lamb!' Why do these young men not come out to this Western world?"

2. I am charged with assuming the authority of inviting those transfers to the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. This I deny. My language is: "Louisiana needs at least twenty, Mississippi needs probably as many, and Arkansas could employ fifty more." That is all that was said in reference to those States, and I took those figures from good authority.

3. I am represented as having used Bishop Keener's name as authority; or why the disclaimer? This I deny. I mentioned no person's name as having authorized me or even advised me to write, and I did not know before that I was under the necessity of submitting my letters to any one for approval before I was at liberty to send them. But in reference to my writing that letter, I did not do it unadvisedly. I had the approval of one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who sent me word to write for such preachers as I thought would suit this country. I had also the approval of two or three presiding elders of influence in this Conference. I think I am of age, and responsible for what I write.

4. I am charged with taking the great liberty of referring parties to Bishop Keener and Dr. Tudor. This I deny in the sense intended to be conveyed. My language is: "On landing at New Orleans let them inquire for Bishop Keener or Dr. Linus Parker, both of whom reside there, also Bro. Tuder (a misprint) who was recently in England, and they would receive the needed advice." There is nothing more in "the letter" referred to having any reference to the disclaimer. I never authorized any preacher to call upon any one in Louisiana or Mississippi for appointment, or for any pecuniary assistance, and no preacher who has come can say that he was so authorized. If you think it right that the whole letter which was in the Methodist Recorder should be published, I will send a copy, and then all can judge whether there was anything in it that would justify or call for that disclaimer. I would not have replied to it but for the advice of friends who understood fully all the circumstances.

Yours fraternally,

William Shepherd.

A NOVEMBER GLORY.

The gold and green have disappeared
From woodlands where the partridge reared
Her numerous brood, and brown and seared
Are now those woodlands hoary.
What though the woods are brown and bare,
And autumn leaves lie thickly there?
There's summer lingering in the air,
And still a lingering glory.

Sweet birds have sought a Southern clime,
To others ring their merry chime:
But had they dreamed of summer-time
Still in the woodlands hoary,
They yet awhile had lingered here
In their old haunts, though brown and sear,
Forgetful of the waning year
In this late autumn glory.

As slipped from us October days,
We grieved to lose their golden haze,
The purple and the crimson blaze,
Of all the woodlands hoary;
But still there hangs a misty vail,
Of golden tissue, thin and frail,
That wraps the distant hill and dale
In its November glory.

The Orchard-Graves History of the Baptist Church Examined.—No. II.

MR. EDITOR: In my first article I took leave of this paragon of a historian, Orchard-Graves, at the interview between Tertullian and Quintilla on the subject of infant baptism.

In the year 246 he introdnces Cyprian, a High Churchman, and a paragon to clergymen of every age, who was born at Carthage. "In 246 he entered on a Christian profession, and united himself to the dominant church in that city." In the same paragraph he quotes Robinson, another Baptist historian, who says "he was an ignorant fanatic, and as great a tyrant as ever lived."—See page 75. What a medley we have here. A paragon is something that is perfect. Cyprian, in the first breath, is a perfect man—"a paragon to clergymen;" in the next "a fanatic, and as great a tyrant as ever lived." Let us follow this "light that shineth in darkness" still further. Cyprian was a "High Churchman," and of course not a "Baptist." "His affluence was considerable, and probably from his largesses and benevolent distribution of property was chosen, two years after (248,) to the bishopric." He found religion in a desperate state.—See History, pages 75 and 76. Cyprian undertakes a reformation, "and was supported by the efforts and labors of Donatns." Now let us see the consistency of this historian. Donatus is, in every part of this history, claimed as a Baptist, and in every instance they are said to hold themselves aloof from other denominations, especially High Churchmen or Catholics. This takes place in the year 248, at which time Donatns must certainly have been at mature age—say twenty-five or thirty. But we proceed to the year 311, and again we find: "Donatns took a prominent station in opposition to the choice of the church, and many persons supported his views." This, we say, occurred in the year 311. Now we found him first participating with Cyprian in the year 248. Take 248 from 311, and we have 63; add to 63 25, the lowest ago we can give him—for, according to their own showing, a person in that day did not reach their majority until 25—and we have the ago of Donatus in 311 to be 88 years.—See History, page 85. Now the reader must bear in mind that this historian claims the Donatists as Baptists; he cannot get back, as he tries to do, to the apostles without it. He goes on, however, to say: "The Donatists did not differ from the Catholics in doctrine, but in morals, and they seceded on the grounds of discipline from the community."—Page 86. Now here is a dilemma into which our historian has got the Baptist Church. It is patent to any one who has heard their declamations that they steadfastly deny ever having anything to do with the Catholic Church; that they never were, and are not to-day, Protestants; that they have "always kept the faith once delivered nnto the saints." I cannot see how credit can be given to the claim of such history, if it deserve the name of history. Such barefaced inconsistencies should be exposed, and their authors held up before the world in their true character—deceivers; for such they certainly are. To a reader who is not critical, but reads simply for information, these inconsistencies would hardly be apparent; but they are too prominent to escape the eye of him who reads in search of truth.

We will go back nearly to the commencement of this book—to page 6. Here we find the historian saying: "It will be our pleasnre to accompany them (the apostles) while in the discharge of their sacred trust, and to observe carefully for our guidance (the italics are his) how they fulfilled their commission." He enters a disclaimer for them as to proselyting.—See index. True, they did no such thing, unless the conversion of the Jews from Judaism could be so construed. It cannot, however, for their dispensation was at an end, and their conversion was the Lord's doings, and it was marvelous in their eyes. But do these "apostolic" pretenders live up to this "guidance?" They are notoriously, this day, more guilty of that crime (proselyting) than any other known denomination. They use every argument, yea they will, some of them, even "make history," in order to make one proselyte; and, as a good brother once remarked, "after they have made him, he is not wiser than Solomon, or more holy than Paul." It becomes nauseating to read the productions of men pretending to take those holy men of old as their exemplars, and at the same time witness the wide deviations from their examples.

Again, he introdnces many authorities to sustain him in the positions he takes, most of which are notoriously Baptist in sentiment; which, I conceive, by no means strengthens his story. He occasionally introdnces Moshsim, a Protestant historian, the recognized authority of other denominations. But how and when? Only when it suits his side of the question! A witness should be heard all through. What would be thought of the ruling of a court, when a witness is put upon the stand, that would say: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are only to receive as testimony what this man says in behalf of the defendant; anything he may say in reference to the plaintiff you are to ignore." Orchard-Graves, in proving up the claim of the Baptist Church to antiquity, proceeds precisely in this way. To give an instance: on page 174, in referring to the Albigenses, he says: "Dr. Allix allows the Albigenses to be looked upon as a colony of the Vaudois. Being satisfied of their genealogy, we observe the reproach of Manicheism has been improperly applied. We have no means of ascertaining what this offensive doctrine was, as enemies cannot be safely credited where their interest is involved!" O consistency, thou art a jewel!—in a horn, or even in a swine's nose.

JOHN SAMPLE.

REV. (?) W. P. MILLER, OF THE NORTHERN CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR: Some thirty years ago Mr. Miller applied to the old Alabama Conference for admission, and after two several applications was admitted on trial, and in the course of years he rose to some eminence as a preacher.

Pending the separation (North and South) in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1844, Mr. Miller had charge of the Choctawhatchee circuit, and submitted to the members thereof the question of separation, and urged them to vote in favor of the South, according to the "Plan of Separation;" and they did so, he heartily approving the step.

When the great question of secession was agitating the whole country in 1860, Mr. Millor was not only in favor of the South, but preached "flaming war sermons" and made blood-thirsty "war speechos," and urged the people to hold on to the "last man and the last ditch." In fact he was so keen for blood that he sought the office of colonel of the Thirty-third Alabama Regiment in 1862, but was defeated. He persuaded and urged many young men to the war, who now sleep in the silence of distant graves, and will rise up in the great judgment to meet and condemn him. So severe was he upon Union men that in Marianna, Florida, he proposed to give his suspenders to hang Mr. Benjamin Hollise, a poor, crippled boot and shoemaker, because he (Hollise) said: "The Southern States ought not to have seceded, because they were the weaker party, and it would result badly in the end." He carried his views and burning sentiments to such an extent as to institute "loyalty to the Confederacy" a test of character in the Quarterly Conference. Thus he went on fuming and blowing till he lost several of his own sons in the war.

At the close of 1863 he sought for and obtained a superannuated relation, which he held to the close of 1865, when he came forward for an effective relation to the Conference. Prior to this, however, he had moved from within the bounds of the Marianna district to within the Camden district. This looked like he desired a prominent position within, if not upon the district; and knowing that the time (four years) of Bro. W. M. Motley, presiding elder of the district, was out that year, it would give Mr. Miller a good chance. That year the Annual Conference held its session in Lowndeshoro, Alabama, Rev. O. R. Blue presiding, as Bishop Paine failed, by sickness, to reach us. However, instead of Mr. Miller being sent to the Camden district as presiding elder, he was appointed to the Navy Yard and Escambia mission. This gave his lofty hopes a loftier fall. Hence, before he had gotten ten miles from the seat of the Conference, he wrote Bro. O. R. Blue a bitter, biting, insulting letter concerning his (Miller's) appointment. In Hayneville, Alabama, he met with Bro. B. F. Blow, who had been sent to the Greenwood circuit, Florida, and proposed to swap with him; but Bro. Blow refused. Here the history of his connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South began to cease. Next heard of, he has joined the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) Why this great change? Doubtless several reasons combine in the change; but the principal one is to be found in money. During this year (1866) he received a letter from a man in the Northern Church, or an agent thereof, containing $100, as a token of high regard, and promises of still better things if he would but change his church relation; and he complies and is soon announced as the presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) in the southeastern portion of Alabama and western portion of Florida. He goes to work at once, and uses whatever of means he could command that gave the least promise of success to his church. He enters those sections where he knew they had been strong Union men, and proposed that they set themselves right, and come over to the "great Union church." To set himself right in one community, in Henry county, Alabama, he told the leading family therein that his charge from his former life and belief was owing to a remarkable dream he had in the year 1864. "He dreamed that he was traveling on the 'big road,' and saw here and there a horseshoe in the road. At length, seeing so many, he got down from his horse and picked up a shoe, and to his utter astonishment he saw engraved upon the shoe in plain letters this sentence: 'Pray for Lincoln!'" Thenceforward he found a great many, all having the same inscription. Being well practiced in figures, types and shadows, he began to reason thus: "A horseshoe is worn by a horse. A horse implies cavalry. Cavalry implies destruction upon the face of the country. The injunction upon the shoe shows the remedy. What shall I do? I'm troubled. Ah, I'll pray for Lincoln! I did so. Then came relief to my mind." This may be called "the horseshoe experience of Mr. W. P. Miller." However, it must be borne in mind that this occurred in 1864, and he never left us till 1866.

At other places he uses different means and arguments in order to beguile the people. For instance, a few Sabbaths ago, at Lee's church, in Holmes county, Florida, he ranted and fumed a great deal, and boasted and threatened no little. Among other big things he said: "The Methodist Episcopal Church South—the secesh church—would soon come over to his church (North,) because they had the money, the men and the power. Yes," said he, "even in the State of Alabama we have now eight hundred traveling preachers! and we are bound to succeed." This declaration, however, need not alarm any one, for he (Mr. Miller) has furnished a rule by which we can come at the facts in the case. This rule I denominate "Miller's two thousand per cent. rule." I obtain the rule in this wise: A few years since this reverend gentleman sent by express from Evergreen, Alabama, to New York $10 in order to purchase $2,000 counterfeit money, which was to be sent to him at Evergreen, marked "C. O. D.," and he would pay down the balance due—$90. All things worked according to expectation, and the $90 were planked down—that is, he paid $100 good money for $2,000 expected bad money. But lo! when he examined the "box" it had no money. However, in this the man is seen and the rule given. Therefore, applying the $2,000 rule for $100 to the number of preachers in Alabama, will give about forty preachers as the true number. Thus we see him "encompassing" money, dreams, fancy, fiction and figures in order to make "one ——."

About one month ago he sent an appointment to preach at Wesley chapel, which church is about eight miles from Geneva, on the road leading from Geneva to Newton, Alabama. This Wesley chapel is of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at which, but a short time before, there had been a gracious revival, and some thirty members added to our church. Now, Miller thought, was his time. At the appointed hour Miller, Johnson and Miller were on hand, and found a goodly number upon the ground. As a matter of course, Miller thought all was right. But in that respectable crowd was a local preacher of our church—Rev. James E. Bush. Bro. Bush met Miller before he got into the house and spoke very pleasantly to him, and told him (Miller) that he (Bush) was sorry that the appointment had been made, for he looked upon it as having no good design to our church, but rather evil. In that church and community all was peace and friendship, and his (Miller's) coming would do no good. "In fact," said Bro. Bush, "the time was when we would have been glad to see and hear you. When you were with us we embraced you and loved you; but now you have gone from us, and we dismiss you. We took you, when young, and nourished you, and made a man of you, and therefore you ought to have more respect for us than to come to disturb us." Mr. Miller replied by saying: "He felt himself under no obligations to the Methodist Episcopal Church South for what she had done for him." "Then," said Bro. Bush, "we are under none to you, and you cannot preach in this church." Whereupon Miller & Co. marched away.

Thus while the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) proposes fraternal relations in the one hand, in the other she holds her mercenaries and minions in the South, who are going about with false statements upon their lips and deceit in their hearts.

A CALL FOR BISHOPS.

MR. EDITOR: Why do our Bishops never visit north Louisiana? There are answers to this question, no doubt, but I cannot conceive of any, at present, that can be considered valid.

At the General Conference of 1866, which was held in the city of New Orleans, a call was made for an increase of the episcopacy in the church, which was done by electing and ordaining four new members to that office. So many were made, it was said, that they might visit all portions of the country, learn the condition of the church, edify and build her up, give Methodism a stronger foothold, and be the cause of the general prosperity of Zion. Something of this purport was expressed. Now that this has been the case, in a large portion of our country, we all fully believe. We hoped then, and have since hoped, that we too might see a Bishop in our much-neglected country, at least at some of our district meetings, which they all promised to visit, and I suppose have done so in some portions as often as possible. But we have never been permitted to enjoy the fruits of their labors at any of those meetings. We had stronger hopes after the last General Conference of beholding the face of a Bishop, when a member of our own Conference was elected to that office. But he seems to have very little care of the interest of the church outside of the city in this State; at least no further than Centenary College and the lake-shore camp meeting. Not that we think he is inactive or indifferent to the general prosperity of the church—no, indeed, far from it; for we read something of his services and of the good he is accomplishing in almost every number of the ADVOCATE. Yes, we hear of Bishop Keener in Tennessee dedicating churches and preaching with power and great effect. Then we hear of him in Mississippi, filling similar appointments, leaving a name and the fruits of his labor wherever he goes. Next, I believe, we hear of him in Alabama, attending commencements, district meetings, and looking after the education of that Conference. There too his labors were not without their influence. Last we read of his making a trip to Arkansas before starting upon his round of Conferences. We also have accounts of the other Bishops being constantly on duty. No, we do not complain of inactivity on the part of our heads in the church; but we do think they have overlooked this portion of their diocese. Some suppose our presiding elders are at fault for not inviting the Bishops to attend our district meetings; but they deny it—at least one did in my presence—as an unjust allegation, and said Bishop Keener had been invited and gave as an excuse for not coming that his time was taken up elsewhere.

It occurs to me that our want of facilities to travel, that many other countries have, may be one cause of our being neglected. Well, it is a lamentable fact that our country is almost destitute of railroads. Our people seem to lack energy and a spirit of enterprise in this particular. This will not always be the case, we hope. But will the Bishops always stay away from us on this account? Will they who teach us to endure privations, and preach to the church the necessity of making sacrifices for its good, refuse to make any sacrifice themselves? Besides, we have streams running through different parts of our country that are navigable a part, at least, of every year, upon which good accommodations may be had. If a Bishop should come among us we would be so proud of him that we would give him transportation and the best accommodation we could afford. It has always been a proverb among Methodists: "When the circuit-rider comes chickens die." We find the children always glad to see the preacher, for their mamma will have something good to eat. Children are fond of good things, you know, as well as preachers. We would like one of our Bishops to make us a visit by way of experiment, and I believe the sisters whose guest he might be would have a larger chicken pie than they had ever been wont to prepare for the circuit-rider. Bishop Pierce made a flying trip through this country about fifteen years ago, on his way to attend the Texas Conferences, and in his Travels tells us of a man who had never seen a Bishop, and expressed some surprise at finding him "nothing but a man." Now, lest some of our youths grow up in like ignorance, we hope they may enjoy the sight before another year passes.

ADELPHOS.

WEBSTER PARISH, LA., Oct. 18, 1872.

THE POWER TO SAVE.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." The world is to be saved through the faith of the Christian. It cannot be saved in any other way. The work of redemption was "finished" in the death of Christ and subsequent descent of the Holy Ghost. The work of the Spirit is "to convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of a judgment to come." This is to be enforced or applied by the life of faith in the Christian. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." Having received the faith, ye are to live it—ye are to demonstrate the truth to the world. The man of faith, therefore, has an intimate connection with God in the work of salvation. He is God's agent. Receiving capital from him, he is to invest it, and thus become the salt of the earth. In this the Christian assumes a responsibility that an angel could not bear—essays a work that an archangel could not do; a responsibility, however, essential to his own salvation. It is the quiet, potential work of a holy life. It is the one thing that cannot be resisted. It is the one form of religious truth that cannot be denied. The holy life—the life of God in the soul, beaming from every line of the face, seen in every word and action of the man—is the power that successfully supplements and enforces the labors of the Spirit. This is the salt that saves. "And let your conversation be honest among the Gentiles, that, whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."

The salt closes its mission when it saves and is consumed in the act. A part of the price will not do. The poor widow was commended in that of her pence she gave all her living. The first and great commandment is to love God with all thy heart, etc. This is Christian perfection. This it is to live by faith—dethroning self and "thinking upon the things of another." The salt has savor only as it saves and is self-consumed. Let your light so shine. God cannot save by the exercise of his omnific power. He cannot work a contradiction. He cannot lie. He cannot make the fig tree bear acorns, nor the grapevine hickorynuts.—Man coerced to do good, kept from evil, ceases to be man. But the Christian can and does do the work. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one of you convert him, etc. In this sense man does what God cannot do—"saveth a soul from death and hides a multitude of sins."

Let your light so shine. Let your life be the incarnation of God's redeeming love. Magnify his grace. Fill to the brim life's measure. "And they glorified God in me." For me to live is Christ.

"TOO GOOD FOR GOD."—Some people act as though their best things were too good for God. Their highest endeavors are the world's. Their corn and wine and oil gladden their own hearts, and on particular occasions the hearts of their friends. But they give grudgingly to God.

Their children are trained for the world. That bright, earnest-eyed boy is too good to be a minister; he is too good to be a missionary; he is too good for God.

The writer of this knew a young man who wanted to be a missionary; but his wealthy and worldly father thought he was too good for that, so he made a merchant of him.

The young man went sadly about his daily tasks. Like the statue of Columbus at Genoa, which is made ever to look longingly westward, the heart of the disappointed young man would look longingly toward the ministry—toward the sublime service of that prince of missionaries, the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Too good for God." Look out, professor of religion, lest in the last great day you, who have thought your best earthly possessions too good for God, shall find that heaven, Christ and everlasting glory are too good for you.—American Messenger.

ABRAHAM JAEGER, a recent convert from Judaism to Christianity, spoke recently in the Michigan Avenue Baptist church, Chicago, concerning the reason of his change of faith. Mr. Jaegor was, prior to his conversion, the rabbi of a Jewish synagogue at Mobile, Alabama. He narrated several instances to show his former prejudice against the Christian religion and his unwillingness to admit its claims. Only after months of thought and study did he finally accept it as his guide. He spoke earnestly and with much feeling, and whatever his former state of soul may have been, seems now to have found rest and peace with Christ.—Church and State.

IF you would be pungent be brief; for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

Obituaries.

DIED, at her residence in New Orleans, on the 5th of September, 1872, CAROLINE ATWOOD, aged about sixty-eight years.

The subject of this memoir was born in Warrenton, North Carolina; removed, when but a child, to Nashville, Tennessee, where she was brought up by a sister; having married very early, she settled in Huntsville, Alabama, where she soon afterward embraced religion, and attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she lived a consistent and worthy member for more than half a century. About ten years ago she came to this city and united with the Felicity street charge, where she remained until three years since, when she associated herself with the Louisiana Avenue church.

Sister Atwood was one of the most faithful, consistent and deeply pious women it has ever been my privilege to know. Her seat in the house of God, whether for preaching, prayer meeting or class meeting, was never vacant, unless sickness or some providential interference prevented her from being there. She always seemed to enjoy and appreciate the services of the sanctuary, was ever ready to share in the exercises, and was quite gifted in prayer. Having been so long accustomed to habits of such thoroughly pious and holy living, her end, as might be expected, was one of peacefulness, hopefulness and triumph. Heaven, I can well imagine, is made up of such spirits, and a whole society of such anywhere would constitute a blissful community.

PASTOR.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased Almighty God to remove from our Sunday school (Soule chapel) our young friend, WALTER WHITWORTH:

Resolved, That we bow submissively to the divine will.

Resolved, That this community has lost a sprightly, excellent and promising youth, his mother a devoted and affectionate son, and our Sunday school a scholar who, while it was not his privilege to attend promptly because of affliction, always had perfect lessons when present, and when prevented, if well enough, recited his lessons to his mother at home.

Resolved, That it affords us gratification to know that he took great pleasure in reading God's word, and that on the last Sabbath of his life he perused with much interest a copy of the Sunday School Visitor sent him by his teacher.

Resolved, That we hereby extend to his widowed mother, brothers, sister and other relatives our sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Canton papers, and also in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MADISON CO., MISS., Oct. 20, 1872.

SARAH JANE TYUS, daughter of John C. and Sarah Tyus, was born in Autauga county, Alabama, June 18, 1826.

When quite a child her parents moved to Meriweather, Georgia. In her fifteenth year, while on a visit to her uncle, Louis Tyus, in Autauga, she embraced religion at Warm Springs camp ground, and afterward joined the Presbyterian Church at Poplar Springs, with her husband, Mr. George S. Houston, of North Carolina, to whom she was married in 1847. In 1852 they moved to Clarke county, Alabama, where she lived until God took her to himself, August 10, 1872.

Ere she bid farewell to all on earth who were dear to her, she left them the sweet assurance that "all was well." She told them she had no fears of death; that her religion had cheered her through life's earnest duties, sustained her in affliction, and would guide her to that beautiful land beyond the stars, where the storms gathered not, but

"—— where wondrous glory
Would fill her happy soul with love;
Where her heart would feel no sorrow,
In that happy land above."

The virtues of humility and resignation were beautifully exhibited in Sister Houston. She ever maintained that meek and quiet spirit, whether in pleasure or pain, joy or sorrow, prosperity or adversity, which so highly adorns woman and renders home happy. She may have had her faults; and who of us have not? May those loved and bereaved ones of home, when they read this, exercise living faith in her God, and be enchained at once and forever to their mother's own beautiful home in heaven. Her aged mother, who still survives her, and her loved companion—the chief mourners—will not long linger behind the dutiful daughter and loving wife. A few more years and they will follow her. That they may be prepared to meet her in that eternal home, and with her occupy a mansion in "that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," is the prayer of

A FRIEND.

IN MEMORIAM.

Departed this life, at her husband's residence in Lee county, Alabama, July 11, 1872, Mrs. MARY C. WADE.

The subject of this brief memoir was the daughter of Rev. W. C. Robinson, who for many years has been a member of the Alabama Conference. She was born in Putnam county, Georgia, September 12, 1823. While an infant she was dedicated to God and the church by holy baptism. Consequently the principles and purity of religion was early and deeply engraved in her heart. In 1835 she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and lived the life of a Christian until her death. Thus for thirty-eight years did she bear witness to the truth that the religion of Jesus Christ is no false dogma. On the second of June, 1844, she became the happy, blooming bride of Thomas H. Wade. Truly can it be said of her that she did him good, and not evil, all the days of her life. She often remarked, for some time previous to her death—although in her usual health—that she did not think she would live long, and only regretted leaving her family. The evening before she died, while returning home with her husband, from a visit to some friends, she had an attack of paralysis, and earnestly desired to reach home, which she did, but only to live a few hours. Her tongue being paralyzed, she was denied the power of speech; but her life is a living testimony that all was well with her. A sweet and angelic smile illuminated her face, and so gently and calmly did she fall asleep in Jesus that we could scarcely tell when her pure spirit took its flight to the mansions of the blessed. As a wife she was perfectly devoted to her husband, and children were never blessed with a better mother. Her influence with them was of a most striking and exalted character. Her opinions on any subject were always desired and appreciated by them. Home was the theater of her sweetest pleasure. She loved to linger around the fireside with her dear ones. She leaves a bereaved husband and seven children, three having preceded her to their eternal home. Last winter her eldest son joined the Alabama Conference. Though fondly attached to him, she bid him adieu with the admonition: "Go, my son, do your duty, and be zealous in the cause of Christ." And he now feels a holier incentive in preaching the gospel. She lived to see all of her children members of the church; and now, when the future looked so bright and life so inviting, the summons came. Thy work is accomplished. Come up higher, and taste of the joys of the sanctified.

None knew so well as I, my precious mother, your life of pure, unselfish devotion to your husband and children. Yours was no common love. Oh! how our hearts were torn with anguish when we beheld the damp dews of death stealing over your loved features, who the day before left us so full of happy life. The future looks very dark without you, mother. But we know you are happy, and that you are now enjoying "the bliss for which we sigh." And though you cannot come to us, we will try to meet you.

INCITEMENTS TO ACTIVITY.

Wake, thou that sleepest in enchanted bowers,
Lest these lost years should haunt thee on the night
When death is waiting for thy numbered hours
To take their swift and everlasting flight;
Wake, ere the earth-born charm unnerve thee quite.
And be thy thoughts to work divine address'd,
Do something—do it soon—with all thy might:
An angel's wing would droop if long at rest,
And God himself, inactive, were no longer blest.

'Tis infamy to die and not be miss'd,
Or let all soon forget that thou didst e'er exist!
Rouse to some work of high and holy love,
And thou an angel's happiness shalt know;
Shalt bless the earth while in the world above;
The good begun by thee shall onward flow
In many a branching stream, and wider grow
The seed that, in these few and fleeting hours,
Thy hands unsparing and unwearied sow,
Shall deck thy grave with amaranthine flowers,
And yield the fruits divine in heaven's immortal bowers!

MERLE D'AUBIGNE.

To the roll of the illustrious dead of 1872 must now be added the name of the greatest Genovan of modern times, the Rev. Jean Henri Merle D'Aubigne, D. D., who died suddenly on Monday, October 21, in his native city. The particulars of his last illness are not furnished in the cable dispatch which announced his departure; but the mere statement of the fact awakens stirring memories and tender sympathies in every Christian land.

Dr. Merle was of French descent. His great grandfather, John Lewis Merle, having left his home at Nismes, in France, after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, found a refuge in Geneva. In 1743 his son Francis married Elizabeth D'Aubigne, daughter of a Protestant nobleman, who was a descendant of the Chevalier Theodore Agrippa D'Aubigne, the grandfather of the celebrated Madam DeMaintenon, mistress and wife of Louis the Fourteenth. Next to the "Grand Monarque," no person in that age did more to uproot and destroy the Reformation in France than this crafty and powerful woman. And in our own times no other man has done so much to illustrate, defend and restore its power in Europe and America as this greatest descendant of the same brave Cavalier, who in his old age was exiled to the city of Calvin by the cruel race for whose royalty he had fought and bled. This is one of the right-cous compensations of an all-wise Providence. The famous apothegm, which forms the basis of D'Aubigne's Introduction to the History of the Reformation in the Sixteenth Century thus receives one of its finest illustrations in his own life-work, "God is in History." According to a common usage in France, the family name of his paternal grandmother, D'Aubigne, was appended to that of Merle. His father, Aime Robert Merle D'Aubigne, was born in 1755. From him descended three sons, the oldest and youngest of whom are in mercantile life. One of them, for many years, has been a well-known resident of Brooklyn, Long Island. The second son, Jean Henri, was born in Geneva, Switzerland, August 16, 1794, and has thus lived a little beyond the ripe old age of seventy-eight years.

Educated in the academy of his native place, he was intended for the Protestant ministry. But the spirit and the faith of Calvin had long since departed from the lifeless Church of Switzerland. Arianism and Socinianism reigned supreme in the pulpits of the land. Professers of theology and pastors of the Reformed Church denied the Lord that bought them. As usual, wherever there is this sad decline in faith the Sabbath was openly desecrated by theatrical performances and public festivities, to enjoy which pastors were sometimes known to dismiss their congregations at an earlier hour, and the day, once devoted to worship and to rest, went out amid blazing fireworks and thunderings of cannon.

At this period, in 1816, Robert Haldane, of Scotland, went to Geneva, and, led by the wonder-working providence of God, gathered around him a few students of divinity, to whom he talked about their souls and the way of life through faith in Jesus Christ. He found them profoundly ignorant of the fundamental truths of the gospel, and yet anxious to be taught. Braving the frowns and menaces of their Socinian professors, nearly all the students of the theological seminary sat at the feet of this master in Israel, who lectured familiarly to them on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans until their vacation in 1817. A number of them were thus led to Christ, among whom were Frederick Monod, Prof. Gaussen, Merle D'Anhigne, and others of lesser but brilliant fame, and faithful servants of God.

In his own account of his conversion Dr. D'Anhigne states that his professor of divinity disbelieved the doctrine of the Trinity, and that, instead of the Bible, "St. Sen[illegible] St. Paul" were the two saints whose writings he held up to admiration." The pupil followed the master thoroughly. He was chairman of a meeting of students who protested most vehemently, in a public document, against "the odious aggression" of a pamphlet entitled "Considerations upon the Divinity of Jesus Christ," by Henri Empeytaz, which was addressed to them, and had produced a great excitement.

But soon after he met Robert Haldane at a private house with some other friends, and "heard him read from an English Bible a chapter from Romans about the natural corruption of man—a doctrine of which (he says) I had never before heard. In fact, I was quite astonished to hear of men being corrupt by nature. I remember saying to Mr. Haldane: 'Now I see that doctrine in the Bible.' 'Yes,' he replied; 'but do you see it in your heart?' That was but a simple question, but it came home to my conscience. It was the sword of the Spirit; and from that time I saw that my heart was corrupted, and knew from the word of God that I can be saved by grace alone. So that, if Geneva gave something to Scotland at the time of the Reformation; if she communicated light to John Knox, Geneva has received something from Scotland in return in the blessed exertions of Robert Haldane."

Such is the plain story of the conversion of this great soul from destructive error to the faith which he has ever since adorned and defended.

After completing his studies at Geneva he attended Neander's lectures on Church History, at the University of Berlin. In 1817 he was ordained to the ministry, and became pastor of a Protestant French church at Hamburg, from whence he was transferred to Brussels, where he was the favorite preacher of the King of Holland, who often resided there from 1815 to 1830. In the latter year he returned to his native city, as professor of church history, and head of the new theological school founded by the Evangelical Society of Geneva. This post he held until his death, adorning it by his piety, learning and eloquence, and sanctified by the divine blessing upon his ever-memorable labors.

Of the twenty volumes which have issued from his prolific pen, the most celebrated are his History of the Reformation in the Sixteenth Century, followed by the History of the Reformation in the times of Calvin. The first idea of writing this great work seized him during a visit to Warthurg Castle, where Luther, in his exile, translated the Bible into the German language for his fellow-countrymen. Its immense circulation in Great Britain and in this country, and on the continent of Europe, is beyond all precedent in the line of great historical works. His celebrated monogram upon the life of Olivor Cromwell, based upon Carlyle's famous biography and letters of the Protector, was expressly designed as an exhibit of that "Protestantism which, in Cromwell's mind, was far above his own person." A number of the historian's occasional essays, reviews, discourses and sermons have also been translated and republished in this country. The latter portion of the History of the Reformation was written by the author in the English language, in which he was perfectly at home.

It is impossible to estimate the far-reaching influence of this work in reproducing the characters, scenes and struggles of the Reformation times, and in its strong hold upon the popular mind.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE BLIND EYE OPENED.

I have recently read of a young lady, twenty-five years of age, who had been blind from birth. For twenty-five years she had lived in midnight darkness, groping through the glooms of an unbroken night. She could not form the faintest conception of the features of those she loved, of rainbow hues, of the bloom of a summer's morning, of the sublime loveliness of the expanded ocean, earth and sky. As her friends endeavored to picture to her the scenes, exhausting the powers of language and illustration in the attempt, her soul struggled in sad and unavailing efforts to form some conception of the wonders which light could reveal.

A successful operation was performed, and sight was restored. For several days she was kept in a partially darkened chamber, until the visual organs gained strength, and she had become a little accustomed to their use. Then, on a lovely, pure morning, the window-blinds were thrown open, and she was allowed to look out, for the first time in her life, upon the wondrous workmanship of God's hand. Then was unfolded to her enraptured gaze the verdure of the carpeted earth, the luxuriance of its vegetation, the flowers, the towering trees waving their leaves in the gentle air, the widespread firmament extending apparently into infinity, and the grandeur of the overarching skies, with their gorgeous drapery of clouds.

She nearly fainted from excess of rapture. Tears of more than earthly delight gushed from those eyeballs which had so long been sightless. "O, wonderful, wonderful!" she exclaimed; "heaven surely cannot surpass this. I never dreamed of aught so lovely. Upon such a scene I could gaze forever, forever, unwearied. No language can describe such grandeur and loveliness. O God! this must be thy dwelling-place, thine effulgent throne."

Thus in an ecstasy of bliss she gazed, exhausting the language of admiration, till her physician, fearing the effect of excitement so intense, closed the blinds.

And thus shall it be with you, O happy, happy disciple of Jesus, when the film which earth and sin have incrusted shall be removed from your eyes, and, entering in at the golden gates, the splendors of the celestial paradise shall be opened to your view. Your eyes are now blinded. No description can give you any adequate idea of the glory and splendor of heaven. Christ will then open these splendors to your sight. And O, what an entrancing view will then astonish and enrapture your soul! The celestial Eden, the paradise of God, the metropolis of the empire of the Almighty, around which the majestic orbs of a limitless universe revolve in adoration of the Monarch there enthroned! Who can imagine the magnificence of such a scene? It will be as far superior to all your earthly conceptions as were the splendors of one of earth's most brilliant mornings to one whose sightless eyeballs had never witnessed but blackness and darkness and gloom. Then you shall see the Almighty Father as he is, hear his voice, and be entranced by his smile. Myriads of angel forms, in all the varied ranks of heaven's peerage, archangels, cherubim, seraphim, shall wing their flight before you, sweeping immensity with pinions which never tire, and flashing in heaven's brilliance plumage whose beauty never fades. The green pastures, the still waters, the towering hills of God, where myriads of celestials take glorious pastime, the golden city, the mansions upon whose architectural beauty infinite wisdom and almighty power have lavished their resources—these are the visions, now utterly inconceivable, which shall then burst upon your view, and where you shall spend your immortality, loving and beloved.

Child of sin and sorrow, uncheered by Christian hopes, can you reject that loving Savior who offers you all this without money and without price—all this, if you will only return with a penitent heart to God, abandon sin, accept Jesus as your atoning Savior, seek the influences of the Spirit to enable you to live a holy life, and thus allow our kind Heavenly Father to adopt you as his child and heir?

"There'll be no sorrow there, there'll be no sorrow there,
In heaven above, where all is love."

RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.—At this date—October 8—a little more than one week from the opening of the session, one hundred and ninety students have matriculated. We said a few weeks ago that there would probably be two hundred students present this session, and now we have within ten of that number. We shall certainly go up to that number and perhaps beyond it. Prof. Harrison has returned from his vacation trip to Europe; all the officers are in place, and everything is in fine working order. There is time yet to send the boys on. Let them come. Randolph Macon College is the place for them. Ashland never was more attractive as a college site and place of residence than it is now.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE circular of Dr. Northrop, proposing to Christian families in Massachusetts and Connectient to receive the forty Chinese children who were sent to this country to be educated, has been responded to by nearly a hundred and fifty parties representing the best Christian families of those States. The youth have reached Springfield, and will soon be distributed. Two have already gone to Wilbraham, two to Hartford, two to Suffield, Connecticut, sixteen to New Haven, and the remainder will be sent to other places. They are to wear the Chinese costume, at least for the present. The Chinese commissioner, who has the general charge of them, will remain in this country.

ALL THE petroleum that has been found in the United States has been in a strip of territory twenty miles, on an average, in width, extending from Canada to Tennessee, parallel with the edge of the second formation and the Alleghany mountain range. Nine-tenths of the present production is found in the Pennsylvania oil region, which is about eighty miles in length.

THE BLIND.

Mr. Levy, the director of the Association for Promoting the General Welfare of the Blind, has published a volume, from which the following summary, made by the London Spectator, is taken:

The writer considers it advisable that blind children should be treated as far as possible like "sighted" children, and that their freedom of action should be encouraged from earliest youth. It is a mistake to make them too dependent, a most mischievous mistake to forbid them walking out alone from fear of possible mishaps. The blind child should be taught to do everything for himself, and "should be permitted to join in common recreations, such as leap-frog, touch, hoop-bowling, skipping with a rope, shuttlecock, marbles, etc., and even the sports of sliding and snowballing should not be forbidden, as they greatly tend to strengthen the system and to give a correct idea of distance. Riding on horseback, when attainable, will be found of great service, and gymnastic exercises are much to be commended." We are reminded too, by the writer's narrative, that while blind children may follow most sports of childhood, blind men and women are not debarred from a number of pursuits for which eyesight might be deemed indispensable. Thus we read once more of the brave John, King of Bohemia, who died fighting valiantly, and whose motto, "Ich dien," is now worn by the Prince of Wales; of Ziska, the one-eyed, who lost his remaining eye in battle, but fought and conquered for Bohemia notwithstanding; of the blind philologist Scapenelli, one of the most accomplished scholars of his day; of Count de Pagan, who, on becoming blind, devoted himself to the study of fortification and of geometry; of Dr. Nicholas Saundersen, who, although blind almost from his birth, lectured upon optics, and was professor of mathematics in the University of Cambridge; of Sir John Fielding, half-brother of the great novelist, and chief magistrate of Bow Street Police Court, whose "acuteness on the magisterial bench may have been equaled, but has never been surpassed;" of Huber, the eminent naturalist, who invented the glass beehives now in common use; and of James Holman, who traveled without an attendant through a large portion of Europe, penetrated five thousand miles into the Russian dominions, performed a voyage around the world, and actually on one occasion saved the vessel by taking the helm. There was a certain John Metcalf, who seems to have pursued his numerous avocations without much hinderance from the loss of sight. It is at least difficult to imagine what more he could have done had he been able to see. As a boy he went birds'-nesting with his schoolmates; as a young man he followed the hounds, he learned to swim and to dive, had the reputation of being a good boxer, was a good musician, dealt in woolen goods and also in horses, established public conveyances, became a builder and contractor, built bridges, laid down roads, made drains, and accomplished some difficult engineering works, which people who had their sight declined.

Mr. Lovy has several interesting facts to communicate with regard to the condition of the blind in Great Britain and Ireland, and about the forty-six institutions established for their benefit. Whether the affliction of blindness is less prevalent than of old he does not say. One of the chief causes of blindness was smallpox; but if the power of this fearful scourge has been enormously diminished by vaccination, there are other diseases affecting the eyesight which would seem to be on the increase, especially among the ill-fed and ill-housed population of our large towns. "The prolific causes of blindness," according to an eminent surgeon, "are small print and gaslight," and the injury arising from these causes is likely to increase rather than to diminish. Cheap newspapers and periodicals, badly printed on bad paper, and bearing, as it were, a moldy appearance, abound throughout the empire, and the amount of labor performed under artificial light is of course far greater than of old.

MR. DARWIN has failed of an election as honorary member of the French Academy of Sciences, although it is said that his peculiar views on religion had no influence in his rejection. One of the members of the academy declared "that the body was actuated solely by scientific reasons, and that Mr. Darwin had too far sacrificed science to reason, and reason to imagination, to deserve a place in the first rank of scientists." That's what religiously scientific men have been saying for a long time.

THE late Bishop of Norwich said: "Cheerfulness is the daughter of employment; and I have known a man come home in high spirits from a funeral merely because he had the management of it."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Methodist Educational Convention, Methodist E. Church, called to meet at Knoxville, Tennessee, assembled September 19. Rev. N. G. Taylor, D. D., was elected president; Revs. J. J. Manker and W. C. Graves secretaries. The subjects of "The Relation of the Church to Common Schools," "Higher Education," and "One Central University for our Church in the South," were discussed with freedom and ability. The convention continued in session two days.

THE Chinese government follows the example of the Japanese, and is sending us well-bred young Chinese lads, to receive an American education in our best schools. Thirty have already arrived, and four times as many are to come. Mr. Northrop, secretary of the State Board of Education in Connecticut, wishes to place these pupils in the care of cultivated American families; he prefers to have two in a family, and not more than two in the same town. This is certainly a wise plan, and will do more to give them American ideas than mere college training.

MR. DREW'S plans for the Drew Seminary and Female College, at Carmel, New York, are completed. The building is to be of stone. The length of front is four hundred feet, the depth of the center two hundred and thirty-five feet, and of the transepts of the wings eighty feet. The central tower is one hundred and thirty-five feet in height above the water-table, and the tower for the observatory one hundred and forty-five feet. There are a hundred and seventy five dormitories, eleven lecture and recitation rooms, twenty-five music rooms, a chapel to accommodate an audience of six or seven hundred, a studio and art gallery, rooms for cabinets, apparatus and library offices, parlors, society rooms, reading rooms, etc., besides the rooms for the domestic arrangements of the house. The cost will be great, the contract for the masonry being $230,000. The first sod was turned September 30, by a grandson of Mr. Drew, and the building is to be completed June 1, 1875. S. D. Hatch, Esq., of New York, is the architect.

THE English correspondent of the New York Advocate makes the following mention of some of the English Wesleyan periodicals: The Watchman and Methodist Recorder (our two Methodist newspaper organs) are a joint property, and a most remunerative one. For a number of years past the dividend to the proprietors has been thirty per cent, besides laying by a considerable amount for the reserve fund, and making a handsome present each year to some of our connectional funds. Mr. Wiseman has for many years been the editor of the Recorder, but since he left England to visit you he has not managed it. His colleague, Mr. Perks, who was designated to visit you, but was unable, will continue to conduct it until the close of Mr. Wiseman's term of office. The Watchman is managed by an editorial committee, of which the venerable but still hale and vigorous Rev. W. Shaw, the well-known African missionary, is the center. It is said that he was a very old-seeming young man; he is the youngest and freshest old man I know. The London Quarterly Review is quietly paving its way, and seems likely to have a long tenure of life.

THE foreigners resident in Yedo number about one hundred and fifty souls. About one hundred of these are English-speaking people. Heretofore there was no place of public worship for Christian people. In February last the initiatory steps were taken to erect a building and to organize a church body. Prayer meetings were held at different houses, from time to time, in spite of great inconvenience, in the fact that Yedo is emphatically "a city of magnificent distances," and the foreign residents live at widely-separated quarters of the city. Thus, the professors of the college live in the center of the city, in the place called O Jingahara; while the business folk and the missionaries live in the European quarter of Yedo, called Tsukidji. A lot was secured and the building began. It was finished by the first of August, but, owing to the absence of many residents during the summer vacation, the dedication was postponed till Tuesday, September 1. On Sabbath day, July 11, in the house of Rev. G. F. Verbeck, the church organization was effected, and the basis of belief and the form of church government were decided upon. The former is that which any Evangelical Christian might accept, and the latter is presbyterial. The church is not to be national or sectarian in any sense. Any one may become a member of it by the simple profession of his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior of lost sinners.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—A large company of missionaries, under the care of the Presbyterian Board, sailed from this port in the steamer Wisconsin, on Wednesday, October 2, to reinforce the different missions in India. The party included Rev. W. Calderwood and family, Miss Bacon and Miss Latham, for the Lodiana mission, Northern India; Rev. S. H. Kellegg and family, Mrs. Wyckeff and three children, for the Furrukhabad mission, Northern India; Rev. W. P. Barker, Rev. J. J. Hull, Rev. J. P. Graham, Miss Mary Pratt and Miss Bunnell, for the Kolapoor mission, Western India; and Miss Kipp, for Syria. Rev. Mr. Dale, of Philadelphia, sailed on Saturday, September 28, for Syria. Miss Brink, M. D., who sailed a few weeks since, will join the party for India at London. Rev. Dr. Warren and his wife, from Illinois, will sail in a few days. In addition to this company, there sailed from New York on Saturday, October 5, on the steamer Australasia, for Glasgow, nine new missionaries, who go out under the American Board. Rev. Mr. Clark and wife, and Rev. Mr. Adams, wife and three children, are for the new mission in Austria, and will be established during the winter, in company with Rev. Mr. Schauffler, at Prague. Rev. Mr. House and wife, and Rev. Messrs. Marsh and Baird, will enter the field in European Turkey, and a lady assistant goes to Eastern Turkey. Two ladies are now on the Pacific, destined to the China missions. Some of the above-named missionaries are returning to their former fields of labor, after a longer or shorter sojourn in this country, but it will encourage the hearts of all the friends of the cause to see so large a band going forth, in the name of the church, to carry the gospel to the heathen.—New York Observer.

THE stations of this (Presbyterian) mission are Cairo, whose population numbers 313,000, where the work was commenced in 1855; Alexandria, with its 238,000 inhabitants; Mansoura, in Lower Egypt; the Fayoum, a province in Middle Egypt, containing 104 villages and 143,000 inhabitants; Osiut, in Upper Egypt, a province of 234 villages and 404,000 inhabitants; and Koos-on-the-Nile, 430 miles above Cairo and 24 below Thebes. In all the churches additions have been made during the past year of native converts to their membership. New and promising churches have been organized at Mansoura, Nakhayleh and Mateah. In all the schools, now numbering eight hundred and eighty scholars, a portion of every day has been devoted to a thorough study of the Scriptures. In various places, as in the Fayoum and in the vicinity of Osiut, assemblies have gathered almost every night in the week for reading the Scriptures, religious inquiry and conversation, and for prayer. In numerous instances people from distant places have asked for visits of missionaries, the opening of schools, and regular preaching of the gospel. To almost all these appeals, however, the missionaries, in their already multiplied labors, have been compelled to own their inability to comply; and thus multitudes, earnestly desiring instruction in better things, have been left to live on in their destitution of both earthly and heavenly light. Much attention has been paid to the most important branch of missionary work—that of raising up a native ministry. Nine students have attended the theological seminary at Ramleh, all of whom, by their study, talents and devotion to the work before them, give evidence of great usefulness in the Master's service hereafter. From all the stations gratifying reports come as to the results of public preaching, the teaching in both boys' and girls' schools, the press, the Bible and book sales, the labors of Bible women, and the women's work among women. We cannot reproduce many encouraging particulars. One will suffice. Among the fourteen members recently received into the church at Sinoris one was a young priest, who formerly served in the Coptic church in the town. Having attended the mission meetings occasionally for two years, and testified, in some measure, against the doctrines and usages of the Coptic Church, he finally came out from it and professed his faith in a living Christianity. The missionaries conclude their report with these words: "With such a field before us—all ever so white for the harvest, and wherever occupied so readily and liberally bearing fruit—who can doubt that one of the very first and mightiest of all our efforts should be that, if we intend to carry on the foreign work here, we should specially see to it that this mission is properly reinforced and this land is energetically occupied? Most decidedly has it been said: God seems to have given Egypt to us as a church; other churches and missionary organizations have kept from even seeming to interfere with us, and thus have left it to us to enter in and occupy. Shall we be indifferent to it? Or, rather, shall we not at once arise and go forward?"—Independent.

"WHY do they call Mr. Kingsley Canon Kingsley, mamma?" asked a little girl. "Because he is one of the big guns of the Church of England, my dear," was the answer.

SCATTERED ABROAD.

It is a suggestive incident related in the Acts that the persecution which fell upon the church after the death of Stephen was the means of giving a wider spread to the gospel. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." The disciples may have been already settling down in their nest at Jerusalem, full of comfort and peace, but not greatly concerned for the world at large. The beginning at Jerusalem had come to be regarded as the ending also, and as the place to sit down and pray and praise, and enjoy religion. That great persecution stirred up the church wholesomely, and sent them out to work. It was as a bombshell falling in the camp, and waking everybody up to a better realization of the Christian's mission. It transformed them all into preachers, and sent them to their appointments even more effectually than a Methodist Bishop could have done.—Philip got to Samaria, and from thence toward the south; encountered the man of Ethiopia; afterward was found at Azotus, and then, preaching in all the cities, we part with him at Cesarea. Where the rest went we do not know, but they doubtless found fruitful fields, and were thankful that something had roused and thrust them out.

Suppose our Christian people, in their snug churches and worshipful routine and enjoyment, could by some means be scattered over the destitute and waste places, and many of them tossed upon the shores of paganism; and all of them, thus whirled and driven, fired with zeal for Christ and the love of souls. How long, if all were sent out, and all preaching with tongue, example and prayer, would it be until the ends of the earth should be evangelized? Precisely such a scattering of Christians over the continents and islands may not be conceivable now, but something like it is needed. The churches in Christendom are too much at their ease in sermon-hearing and in mere worship—having a pleasant time at Jerusalem, and very happy and satisfied in singing and in waiting upon the ordinances. The body and soul are not abroad, the heart and conscience are not enlisted, personal effort and the individual resources are shut up and kept at home. The little that is being done is at arm's length, and very feebly and grudgingly done by proxy. If the Lord could have his way he would partially break up these nests of religious luxury, and send out from them both money and people to reach the ends of the world. Our advancing columns and outposts bear no just proportion to the base of operations. It is nearly all base, and more like an entrenched camp, shut up and besieged, than like an army moving freely and vigorously upon some great objective point. Conservation swallows up the idea of extension, and the work of missions, which is the work of the church, is in fact of secondary importance.

Something seems to be needed to bring about a bodily breaking up and diffusion of the personal and material resources—some disrupting and violent agency which shall set us free, and send forth the men and women of God as lights in the world. There is an urgent demand for personal activity in every community, open doors for local preachers, and for praying Sunday school teachers. Here in New Orleans our suburban churches are calling for help. They require the presence of those who could strengthen them if they would. The same is true, to some extent, everywhere. Much of the working material of the strong churches might be detailed to the outposts. But it is easier to worship than to work, and far pleasanter to be hearers than doers of the word. There are congregations of Christians in every section, the most of whom do nothing. They enjoy the means of grace, hear the preaching, and love their church; but to branch out into neglected neighborhoods, to forego the delightful services of their chosen sanctuary, and to make even religious sacrifice for Christ, is beyond their thought.

There are thousands of congregations that need an earthquake or some other convulsion that shall shake them from center to circumference. We have an admirable method for the distribution of preachers, but some fields are destitute and others are groaning under a plethora of the called and the ordained. There ought to be a spirit of expansion and a love equal to the maintenance of an equilibrium. It ought to have been so at Jerusalem, but God sent a thunderbolt to wake up the disciples and send them about their business. It was a severe expedient, a hard remedy to tear people up root and branch and hurl them forth as if shot from a catapult; and so it would seem now if God were somehow to lay his hand upon these overcrowded hives and sow them broadcast over vacant fields. Many who are doing almost nothing would find their work, and in time would rejoice in it, if subjected to some such process. What they now shrink from as a calamity would prove a blessing to themselves and to the church.

MARKED CONCESSIONS AND A TERRIBLE INDICTMENT.

BY JEFFERSON HAMILTON, D. D.

The Methodist (New York) has recently been discussing Methodist worship in a series of articles, in which there are not only sad and striking concessions in regard to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but a fearful indictment brought against the ministry of that church—such an one as we can hardly credit. It is strange that the writer does not see that the coldness in Methodist worship, of which he complains, is the simple result of waning spirituality; that liturgical supplementing can never make amends for this. The church must come back to the spirit of primitive zeal and piety, and "baldness," as well as coldness, will disappear. Nevertheless, there is but too much truth in the complaint that the attitude of Methodist congregations is essentially that of spectators and critics; and we think that there might be an improvement made by so modifying our public worship that the congregation should join in parts of it, and thus cease to be mere spectators. But the question is, What shall that modification be? The Methodist says:

Our ordinary Methodist congregational worship is cold, and continually tends to grow colder. The singing and prayer are becoming forms, and the congregation assumes more decidedly the attitude of a group of hearers and spectators. The evil begins to be serious, and, as wise men, we should cast about for a remedy. We cannot, in public worship, rely upon spontaneous enthusiasm, or exaltation, greater or less, of devotional feeling.

Our Discipline has given no directions which will have the necessary effect to bring the people into an active sharing in public worship. Our practice is what may be expected from our Discipline. The people are presumed to co-operate in the song; after that they are prayed for, and read and preached to. Their attitude is very much that of critics. The preacher is a candidate for their favor, and is rewarded by their approval of his discourse.

This is all wrong, and in time will obliterate the idea of worship. The people should have some part in reading the Scriptures—if not generally, then at least some selected portions. The singing should never be wholly taken from them. Some part of the prayer should be repeated by them with the pastor.

But the most serious part of the allegation is that "many of the preachers are not converted, and deny the true, old-fashioned gospel work of conversion." Is this so? Is this the judgment of a sober, reliable man, or the dictum of an extremist? If the former, and the judgment be correct, how have these men been taught that they have fallen into such an error? and how have the various examinations preparatory to and in the Conferences been conducted, that men have not only been admitted into these bodies, but advanced to the pastorate, who were ignorant of the grace of God? We should judge that Dr. Crooks would hardly publish such a charge from an unreliable source. We have fallen on evil times when a respectable Methodist journal feels justified in publishing such a statement to the world. If the judgment be true, no wonder that Inskip should state that the fiercest opposition to the doctrine of sanctification came from Methodist ministers. But to the extract:

Many preachers are not converted. In fact, they deny the true, old-fashioned gospel work of conversion, such as Paul felt, and John Bunyan and John Wesley and George Whitefield felt. Their hearts are not in the work. They hanker after the world. Their dress, their daily food, their novel-reading, their trifling conversation, all betray them. How can such preachers give life to a congregation? They have no holy fire themselves.

We regret to state these facts, but they are palpable. The consequence is that very many of our church members are strangers to experimental religion. How can such men take a lively interest in the worship of a pure, holy, spiritual God? Living in worldliness, in sin, all the best liturgies in the world would have no effect to arouse them to spiritual worship. Let preachers of the gospel be converted, holy, self-denying, unworldly, unfashionable, humble, prayerful Christians, and we shall see a different state of feeling and devotion in our congregations and in our churches. We need a strong, deep, pure revival of religion among preachers of the gospel.

BETTER THAN LIFE.

When properly viewed, life is such a beautiful thing that we are ready to conclude there can be nothing better. The life that is peaceful and prosperous, in which the sunshine is broader than the shade, has so much of quiet happiness that we imagine there is nothing more desirable. Even a life full of dark shadows is not often wished away. Men love life dearly. They cling to it with a tenacity which is surprising. It is not often they willingly let it go. What, then, can be "better than life?" David answers: "Thy loving kindness is better than life." David saw life under quite a variety of circumstances, and hence was prepared to make a proper estimate of it. He saw it when he was a simple shepherd boy. He saw it when he was the acknowledged champion of a great army. He saw it when he was the sovereign of a mighty nation. He saw it when he was a monarch dethroned by his own son. His opinion, then, in regard to it is at least entitled to some consideration. It seems to us that he was competent to pass a judgment upon its value. He does pass such a judgment. He says there is something "better than life." And that something is God's love. "Thy loving kindness is better than life." Human life is represented as a great sea, but it has a shore upon which human hopes are dashed to pieces! God's love is a boundless ocean, upon whose gently-rolling billows our hopes may float forever. Human life is a vast plain, adorned with flowers and waving in beauty, but away in the distance the plain juts up against the sky and stops the vision. God's love is an ever-opening and ever-enlarging field of wonder and glory, where the eye and the heart may range in delightful contemplation ever more. Whatever is beautiful or useful or good in life is the result of God's love. Is life honorable? God's love makes it so. Is it full of light? The rays of God's love make that light. Is life full of love? God's love is the fountain whence all other love flows. Is life tinged with hope? God's love produces it. Is life full of sorrow? God's love spans every cloud with the bow of beauty. Life's flowers wither and fall into the dust. The blossoms of God's love will shed their fragrance upon the air of immortality. Life's blessings will cease to bless. The blessings of God's love will still be blessings in the regions of the great hereafter. Life's pleasures will cease to please. The pleasures of God's love will thrill the soul when the saved saint shall stand upon the banks of the river of eternal life. Life's employments weary the nature and wear away the energies. The employments which God's love gives will be a source of strength and vigor forever. Life's companions fall away one by one. The companions that are bound together by the bond of God's love will hold sweet communion through endless ages. Human life does not fill up all the desires, nor satisfy all the deep wants, nor meet all the high aspirations of the soul. God's love leaves not a single desire unfulfilled, nor a single wish ungratified, nor a single hope unrealized. How true, then, that this love is "better than life."

Reader, do you know anything of the Father's love? Open your eyes and see it everywhere. See it in the woods and in the fields, in the seas and plains, in the rivers and lakes, in the mountains and vales, in earth and air and sky, in history and science and providence and grace—everywhere behold a manifestation of God's love. When you are apprised of the fact that you have gained the love of another, your heart goes out in response to that love. Everywhere and in everything God shows his love toward you. Then let your heart follow the bent of its inclination to go out in eagerness in response to your Father's love. Yield to God—the good, the loving, the tender Parent of all—the costliest devotions of your soul and the deepest affections of your nature, and realize the blessedness of the truth: "Thy loving kindness is better than life."

E. M. BOUNDS.

EUFAULA, Nov. 2, 1872.

GOING TO PRESS on Wednesday morning, our reports of the elections are necessarily fragmentary and incomplete. The general result, however, is indicated in the latest telegrams in our news department. Grant is undoubtedly elected by a large majority, and the policy of the national government is thus fixed for another four years. Louisiana has probably elected the Liberal fusion ticket for State officers, but no official returns have been received up to date. At any rate, the election is over, good order prevailed generally, and we may now settle down to the affairs of every-day life.

THE thirty-sixth session of the Arkansas Conference met in the Methodist church, Bentonville, Arkansas, on Wednesday morning, October 16, 1872.

THOUGHTS AND FLOWERS.—It is with our thoughts as with our flowers—those that are simple in expression carry their seed with them; those that are double, charm the mind but produce nothing.

WE SHOULD pray with as much earnestness as those who expect everything from God; we should act with as much energy as those who expect everything from themselves.—Colton.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE LORD'S SUPPER, as set forth in the Book of Concord, critically examined, and its fallacy demonstrated. By Rev. J. B. Gross. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

The author's protest against creeds is well enough so far as it applies to the Formula of Concord and all unscriptural creeds, but the rejection of them altogether is neither expedient nor practicable. Churches and individuals have a right to say what they think the Scriptures teach. The view of the Lord's Supper, as presented, is in the main what we believe, and is the author's creed in reference to this sacrament. The work is written to expose and refute the errors of the Lutheran Church, and of course examines the doctrines of the real presence, transubstantiation, consubstantiation, and relative matters. Kain & Co., New Orleans.

A MANUAL OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. A new text book for schools and colleges. By John S. Hart, LL. D. Philadelphia: Eldredge & Bro., 1873.

The author of this work has furnished a much-desired book. There are biographical sketches of nearly all American writers, and quotations from the works of the most celebrated. Beginning with "the earlier colonial period," the history of our literature is brought down to the present time. So far as we have examined the work it is free from prejudice and unfairness, and prepared in a most truthful and candid spirit. It makes a volume of six hundred and forty-one pages, and is furnished with a complete index. For purposes of reference and for occasional reading it should be in every library.

THE GIFT OF THE KNEES, OR THE MINISTRY OF PRAYER THE MINISTRY OF POWER. American Tract Society, Boston. Kain & Co., New Orleans.

There is an introduction explaining the origin of the title, and recalling a racy book which the last generation will remember, Huntington's "Bank of Faith." Reference is also made to Muller's "Life of Trust," and the reader is then presented with three stimulating narratives, illustrating the subject—two by the well-known author, Mrs. Shipton, and one, "Three Days in the Life of Gellert," a charming tale from the German. A useful volume, and one to be commended to devout souls.

A CYCLOPEDIA OF THE BEST THOUGHTS OF CHARLES DICKENS. E. J. Hale & Son, New York.

We have received No. 3 of this popular publication.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for October contains the usual amount of choice illustrations, and articles of great ability and interest on important religious topics. The publishers say: "The Sunday Magazine commences a new volume with the present issue. Year by year this periodical has met with extended favor; and this its conductors accept as an incitement to fresh effort to make the Magazine yet more fully realize its original object. They feel assured that their readers will regard the promises they are enabled to give respecting the new volume as some proof of their continued anxiety to attain this end."

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—Speaking of this magazine, published by Littell & Gay, Boston, the New York Evening Post of the seventeenth ultimo says: "It has flourished for so long a period that in many families the memory of the children goes not back to a time when it did not come every week with the regularity of the seasons, and to its thousands of readers it is as much a part of the civilization of the country as the common school or the university, or Thanksgiving, or Yankee Doodle, or any other institution."

GOOD WORDS for October is more copiously illustrated than usual, and presents a very attractive table of contents. It has: Oxford in the Seventeenth Century; Sermons Preached Before the Queen at Balmoral; Wanderings in Spain; Counsels of Charity; Serbian Folk Lore, and other articles.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for November contains its usual amount of fresh and original reading matter. It has: A Lear on the Steppe; An Escape from Johnston's Island; The Aztecs and their Conquerors; Individuality; The Campaign against Grant in North Mississippi, and other articles.

THROUGH KAIN & CO., of New Orleans, we have received Apples of Gold, handsomely bound, and embracing all the weekly numbers for 1872. It is a most beautiful volume, and the very thing for the children. Published by the American Tract Society, Boston.

THE RURAL ALABAMIAN, published by C. C. Langdon & Co., Mobile, is a very handsome monthly, and conducted with taste and ability. We have received the October number.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE YOUNG for October is, as usual, filled with astonishing pictures, wonderful stories, and a rare supply of amusing, entertaining and instructive reading for the young.

OLD AND NEW for this month has: God in Humanity; Ephesus of the Church History; How to Sleep; Have Workingmen any Causes of Complaint? and other articles fresh from the mint.

PRACTICAL HINTS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS is a neat pamphlet of 80 pages, by E. D. Jones, published by the St. Louis Book and News Company.

THE Ladies' Floral Cabinet and Pictorial Home Companion is a beautifully illustrated sheet, published by Henry T. Williams, New York.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for November has a charmingly illustrated article, "From the Field to the Fireside," besides other articles of interest.

THE Southern Field and Factory for October is a good number.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE NEW YORK Tribune says: An American Committee of Revisers of the English Scriptures, in conjunction with the British Committee of Revision, has been organized at No. 40 Bible House, in New York, by the election of permanent officers, and has already begun its responsible work. The leading denominations and literary institutions of the country were represented. Dr. Schaff reported the result of his correspondence and personal conference with the British Revisers, and distributed confidential copies of the revised version of the books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus and the first three gospels, which he had received from England for the use of the American committee. The committee then proceeded to elect permanent officers. Dr. Schaff, of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, was elected president; Prof. Day, of the Divinity School of Yale College, corresponding secretary, and Prof. Short, of Columbia College, treasurer. The committee then divided into two companies, the one for the Old and the other for the New Testament. Prof. Green, of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, was elected chairman of the Old Testament company, and Ex-President Woolsey chairman of the New Testament company. Both will hold meetings every month in the Bible House. No provision has been made, as yet, for meeting the necessary expenses of the committee. Friends of revision who are disposed to aid in this great work are requested to send their contributions either to the president or to any member of the committee. The following scholars compose the committee:

Old Testament Company.—Prof. William Henry Green, D. D., chairman, Princeton, N. J.; the Rev. Thomas Conant, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Prof. George E. Day, D. D., New Haven, Ct.; Prof. John Dewitt, D. D., New Brunswick, N. J.; Prof. George Emlen Hare, D. D., Philadelphia, Penn.; Prof. Charles P. Krauth, D. D., Philadelphia, Penn.; Prof. J. Packard, D. D., Fairfax, Va.; Prof. Calvin Stowe, D. D., Hartford, Ct.; Prof. James Strong, D. D., Madison, N. J.; the Rev. C. V. A. Van Dyck, D. D., Beyrut, Syria; Prof. Taylor Lewis, LL. D., Schenectady, N. Y.

New Testament Company.—Theodore D. Woolsey, D. D., LL. D., chairman, New Haven, Ct.; Ezra Abbot, LL. D., Cambridge, Mass.; the Rev. G. R. Crooks, D. D., New York; Prof. H. B. Hackett, D. D., Rochester, N. Y.; Prof. James Hadley, LL. D., New Haven, Ct.; Prof. Charles Hodge, D. D., Princeton, N. J.; Prof. H. T. Warren, D. D., Boston, Mass.; Prof. Matthew B. Riddle, D. D., Hartford, Ct.; Prof. Philip Schaff, D. D., New York; Prof. Charles Short, LL. D., New York; Prof. J. Henry Thayer, D. D., Andover, Mass.; the Rev. Edward A. Washburn, D. D., New York; Prof. A. D. Kendrick, D. D., Rochester, N. Y.; the Rt. Rev. Alfred Lee, D. D., Wilmington, Del.

THE numerous friends of the late Dr. Baldwin, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, will be gratified to learn that his son Charles—a promising young man—is preparing for the ministry. He accompanied Prof. Summers to Greensboro, to enter the Southern University. We predict for him a successful course in that institution. The University opened, October 1, with encouraging prospects.

PRAISE never gives us much pleasure unless it concur with our own opinion, and extol us for those qualities in which we chiefly excel. Hume.

POWER and liberty are like heat and moisture: where they are well mixed, everything prospers; where they are single, they are destructive. Saville.

CHANCE FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—Paper Sent Till 1874 for $2.—Persons subscribing for the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at any time from the first of November, 1872, to the first of January, 1873, will have the paper sent to them till the first of January, 1874.

EXTENT OF CIRCULATION.—The New Orleans Daily Times claims that its circulation is "OVER DOUBLE that of any other journal in the South." If the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be regarded as one of the "journals in the South," the Times is misinformed. Our opportunities for obtaining accurate information are equal to those of the publishers of the Times. Their circulation cannot be more than their issue. Their regular issue falls to between two and three thousand below the circulation of the ADVOCATE, according to our information.

CAUTION.—Remittances should always be accompanied with instructions how to apply them. A brother sends money to Robert J. Harp, agent. It is placed to his credit on book account. The ADVOCATE book-keeper never saw it except in the list of acknowledgments, and sends him the customary monthly statement, showing a balance against him. He writes sarcastically perhaps: "Remitted at such and such dates." We refer to files of letters and find it even so, but that he had accounts with Book Concern and also with ADVOCATE, and did not say on which one of them it should be credited. The amount due on one side of the house stood to his credit; on the other the discrepancy resulted from his neglecting to say "for Advocate." By giving us specific instructions our correspondents will save us much trouble.

WE DIRECT ATTENTION to the advertisement of Mrs. Washington's emporium of fashion, 193 Canal street.

J. W. PETTY, photographer, 151 Canal street, advertises cheap photographs. His motto is: "Quick sales and small profits."

WILLIAM A. JORDAN, builder, 238 Erato street, whose card appears in another column, will be found to be a competent workman.

ANDERSON, at his photographic studio, 183 Canal street, produces excellent photographs, and makes a specialty of the sun pearl and crayon photo. All the latest improvements in the photographic art are used.

H. HALLER, 49 CAMP STREET.—We call attention to the advertisement, in another column, of H. Haller, sole agent of the famous Buck's Brilliant Stove for Louisiana; also sole agent for the celebrated Ringen Washer in the States of Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi.

THE NEW REMINGTON EMPIRE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.—The advertisement of William Hogan, 99 and 101 Canal street, general agent for this sewing machine, will be found in another column. The agent claims many desirable qualities for the Remington machine, and will always be pleased to exhibit it.

HAMS AND BACON.—Next to bread, pork in its various forms may be called the staff of life. Mr. S. B. Churchill, No. 40 Magazine street, has on hand a large supply, including sugar-cured hams at twelve and a half cents, green shoulders at eight cents, and smoked shoulders at eight cents per pound. He has also one hundred barrels of good family flour at $8 per barrel. no7 4t

IN PASSING down the south side of Canal street we are invariably attracted by the fine display of China, glass and house-furnishing goods at the doors and in the show windows of the extensive establishment of Messrs. Navra, Offner & Co., at No. 174. It has doubtless attracted the attention of thousands, who have no conception of the vast extent and variety of their imported and domestic wares. We have been especially impressed with the moderation of their prices, which seem to us to be lower on some articles than we have ever seen. Mr. Navra was for many years in the old house of Levi, Navra & Co., in which Mr. Arrundel was also a partner. Mr. Offner has been in his present location for several years, and has there enjoyed a large patronage, brought by his courteous manners and well-known reasonable prices. Having long purchased in Europe, they are well acquainted in foreign markets, and are therefore able to buy at the lowest prices and the choicest styles. Purchasers will do well to call and examine for themselves their assortment and prices.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.—A Bible collector, in giving his views upon this subject, sends the following illustration:

When I was in Caledonia, Racine county, this summer, I called upon a man for his contribution to the Bible cause. He is not a wealthy man. He does his own work on the farm. He looked over his books and said his contribution would be $70. I asked him: "Why this remarkable benevolence?" He said: "Six years ago I felt I was not giving enough to the Lord, so I resolved to give in proportion to his blessings, and I hit upon this plan: I will give five cents for every bushel of wheat I raise, three cents for every bushel of oats, barley, etc., ten per cent. for the wool, butter, etc., that I sell. The first year I gave $20, the second $35, the third $47, the fourth $49, the fifth $59, and this year my Bible contribution is $70. For twenty years previous," he continued, "my doctor's bills had not been less than $20 a year, but for the last six years they have not exceeded $2 a year. I tell you, 'there is that scattereth and yet increaseth,' and 'the liberal soul shall be made fat.'" How many will follow this man's example?—Bible Society Record.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. CRADLE SONG.

BY C. DAY NOBLE.

Fold thy snowy eyelids down
Over pansy-petaled eyes,
Let thy lashes in rosy-brown
Fall like shade on sunset skies,
Sweet and golden
Baby, golden
In a nest of sanctities.

Winds and waters come and go,
Day in white and night in pall;
Blossoms in the green spring blow,
Fruits in yellow autumn fall.
Wake to kiss me!
Sleep! I miss thee,
Now the dreamland angels call.

Sorrow, baby, bringeth joy,
Work and waking, dreams and rest;
All the dear Lord's sweet employ
Is to rock us on his breast,
Life is rocking,
Death is flocking
To his arms as to a nest.

A Journey in a Bag.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

I have a story to tell you, young folks, for I am a traveling individual, and I have seen many things that you never saw, and perhaps never heard of.

You must know that I am a letter. I was born—that is, I was written—in the city of New York, by a beautiful young lady. I am no common letter, on coarse paper, in a shabby yellow overcoat—envelope you call it—by no means! My paper is of the daintiest, cream laid and rose-scented, with a gorgeous monogram at the top. My coat is to match, and I used to live in a tiny rosewood desk, with others of my kin.

When my mistress had written her messages she folded me up, put me carefully into my coat, sealed it, and gave me to the letter-carrier.

I was young and foolish then, dear children, and I thought I was starting on a pleasant journey to find the "John" whose name was written on my coat. Little did I suspect that my very first trip would be taken in a horrid, dark, leather bag, tied up in a package between a dirty yellow coat smelling of fish, and a dingy white one, so strong of musk one could hardly breathe. I knew I should have the vulgar smell of musk forever after.

But at last I reached California—where I was sent—and when I found myself in a light, clean box, with a glass front, I hoped I should soon find "John." But, alas! when I was handed out, with other letters, to a man who asked for us, he looked at me and handed me back.

"John Howard—there's no such name in my house. The letter don't belong to me."

"But it's directed to Box 487," said the clerk.

"Well, it's a mistake," said the man, and my heart sank as I went back into another box, with lots of others.

In a day or two a clerk came and wrote down the names of us all, and passed us over to a young lady, saying, as he did so:

"Here are the advertised letters."

I wondered what that meant, but she sorted us over, put me in a pile with others, and stuck us into a box marked H. Soon I found out that all our names were printed in a newspaper, and every little while all day some one would come and ask for one of us. They asked for Howe and Horton and Hanson, but no one came for Howard.

I felt very much discouraged as I thought of my lovely young mistress, and how she longed to have her message given to "John." But what could I do—but wait?

I had a good long wait too, I tell you, for I lay in that office two months. Nobody came for me, and at last, when I began to think I should die there, a man came and took us all out, and began to do us up again.

"What are those?" asked a lady's voice.

"Dead letters, madam," replied the man. "I'm putting them up for the Dead Letter Office."

So I was dead—was I?

I had heard of death, but I felt alive enough, and I shivered to the end of my last page when I thought perhaps I should be buried.

Buried, indeed?—I should think so! Back I went into that horrid bag, and an awful, long, jolting journey I took. But at last our prison was opened, and I found myself in the Dead Letter Office, in Washington.

That's a curious place. In the first place I went into a room, where perhaps a dozen clerks were at work at monstrous piles of letters of all kinds—business letters, love letters, money letters, begging letters. Oh, I can't tell you half the kinds there were.

Our bag was emptied before a very busy young man, and he proceeded at once to open us. Now, I knew he wasn't John Howard, and felt very much insulted.

But of course I couldn't say anything, and so my cont was rudely jerked off, and he began to read.

He had five piles of letters he had read.

The first pile were those that had money, over $1. On the envelopes of these he wrote how much money was in them, and I understood from what I heard that they were carefully sent back to the writers.

The second pile was letters that had checks or drafts or valuable papers. These too were sent back to the writers.

The third pile was letters with small sums of money, letter stamps, receipts and such things. All sent back.

The fourth pile was of letters containing nothing, but with the name of the writer signed so they could tell where to send it. My dear mistress had signed her full name very nicely:

MOLLY HOWARD,
196 Blank street,
New York.

So I went into the fourth pile. But I tell you the fifth pile was a sight. The letters were signed with all sorts of fancy names—Fanny, Lu, Josie, Will, Harry, and so on. Half of them hadn't a sign of a date. Of course they couldn't be sent back, because how would a respectable letter look—I should like to know—addressed:

"AFFECTIONATE JENNY,
New York."

How do you suppose the postmaster could pick out the special "affectionate Jenny" in that big city?

Of course it's ridiculous. So they just go to the fifth pile, where an awful fate awaits them. I tell you I was glad my Miss Molly wasn't so silly as to sign like that.

These unfortunate letters were put into a cruel machine, which tore them into bits! Then they were "dead letters," indeed; and their remains were sold to paper dealers.

When the day's letters were sorted, and there were a good many thousands of them, all the piles were gathered up and carried to other rooms. All the fourth pile went to a room where each of us was put, overcoat and all, into a new envelope and directed to the one who wrote the letter.

I was directed, as I told you I was signed:

MISS MOLLY HOWARD,
196 Blank street,
New York,

and was stamped with a curious sign: "6 cents due."

Well, I went into another horrid bag, but I had got used to it by this time; besides, my strong buff overcoat protected me pretty well, and all my neighbors had also clean buff overcoats. After a short journey I found myself in another postoffice.

Then I was given to a man with a big bag, and I knew him the minute I saw him. He was the very man who took me from my mistress, so long ago, and my heart beat for joy as I thought I should soon see her again, and perhaps return to my dear home in her desk.

She came to the door and took me.

"Six cents due," said he.

"Why," said she, looking at my new overcoat, "from the Dead Letter Office!" She took out her purse and paid the carrier six cents. That was to pay for my journey from California to Washington, and from Washington back to New York, two fares—or postages—you see.

When she had paid she went into the house and opened the letter.

"My own letter to John, I declare!" she exclaimed, "written last summer. I wonder why he never got it?" and she looked carefully at me. "Oh, I see. It is directed to Box 487, and it should be 486. What a shameful blunder!"

She laid me, with a sign, into the same desk, saying to herself:

"I'll keep it any way, to show John that I did write."

My old friends were all gone from the desk, except a pearl-handled knife and a gold pen, but I found new sheets of paper with the same monogram, and, regarding me as a traveled stranger, they are very polite to me.

So I'm very comfortable now, but I shall never get back my delicate perfume; because, you know, any one who has associated with people of vulgar perfume—or ideas—can never quite get rid of the evil—all his life.—Christian Union.

Stone Lilies.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

What do you suppose a stone lily is?

A lily cut out of stone? No; it is a flower that grows in the bottom of the sea, on a long stem that shakes and waves about in the water. Strangest of all, the beautiful flower is alive, and actually eats.

Sometimes there are several on one branch, exactly as flowers grow on land. The root fastens to the rock, and several branches spring from one stem, each with its beautiful lily-shaped flower at top.

These blossoms are really the body of the animal, and the beautiful feathery petals, looking so innocent, waving about in the water, are really the creature's arms. And they wave about in the water, not to look pretty, but to catch something to eat.

Very funny would it look, if you could see one of them, to see a tiny atom of a fish, or other sea animal, happen to touch this lonely flower. Instantly every feathery petal would close over the victim, and stuff it into his mouth.

For he has a mouth, a good big one too, hidden among the petals. Think of a lily with a mouth! Then when that morsel was disposed of, in his roomy stomach, you would see him spread his arms again, looking as innocent as though nothing had happened.

There's another droll thing about these stone lilies. Having no fingers or forks to pick out the bones, they are obliged to swallow their food bones and all. But they don't like bones in their stomach any better than you do, so when the meat is all digested they just open their mouth and throw out what is left.

Such an arrangement might be convenient for some children I've seen, who don't seem to have time to eat like other people, but swallow their food whole, like the little stone lily.

If the water around him is too much disturbed he folds his arms and looks exactly like a lily bud that has never been opened.

But all of the family are not alike. Some of them seem to get tired of sitting forever on a stem—as I should think they would—and in their old age start off on their travels.

One especially, that lives in the Mediterranean. He is a very lonely creature, with ten feather-like arms, each as long as your finger. He is purple, spotted with white. When he gets restless and uneasy, as I said, he just snaps himself away from his stem and swims off. He looks like a beautiful star floating about in the water. Though he is now free, he still lives at the bottom of the sea.

Men who study these creatures of the sea, and have arranged them into families, have given another name to this family, and I'll tell you what it is, though it isn't half so pretty as stone lily, and I don't believe you'll remember it a minute: It is Crinoidæ.

BE PARTICULAR in the choice of your companions; they should be spiritual, holy, self-denying believers; if they are not they will injure you by their spirit and example.

The Farm and Garden.

Beeswax and Honey-Comb.

To the honey-bee we are indebted solely for the production of the two important articles of commerce, wax and honey.

The production of the former is one of the most remarkable physiological operations of this interesting insect. Formerly it was thought that bees disgorged the wax from their mouths, and many eminent naturalists hold this opinion. Others believed that it was gathered by the bees ready-made, and required no elaboration, or very little. Both of these views are held, even now, by many who have never taken the trouble to inform themselves.

The experiments of Hunter, Dumas and others revealed the fact that the bees carried with themselves this important building material. The segments of the abdomen of bees overlap from before, backward, and beneath the margins of these segments are two broad, smooth surfaces, which during a part of the year maintain two thin white and nearly transparent lamina, which are actually composed of wax. The wax is secreted by small glands within the abdomen, and exudes through the soft material between the segments. The theory is that all sugary matters digested by the bee are, to a great extent, formed into wax, and that this wax is secreted like fat.

After the wax is thus elaborated it is worked with the mouth and kneaded with saliva, until it acquires the requisite degree of ductility for the construction of comb. In this work the bees unite in groups. Each one seizes a small lamella of wax, kneads it into a round ball and attaches it to the top of the hive. After a sufficient number have been placed in position, the cells are hollowed out by workers and formed into regular hexagonal shape by pressure. This figure combines the greatest economy of space and material. It has been estimated that twenty-five pounds of honey are consumed for the production of one pound of wax. This is doubted now by some writers on apiculture, but all agree that much time, labor and material are employed in its production. This fact, when understood, accounts for the marvelous quantities of honey obtained from single stocks during one season since the introduction of the extractor.

Each comb in a hive is composed of two ranges of cells backed against each other, the base or partition between being formed of alternate pyramidal cavities, forming the bottom of each cell. In every well-filled hive there is a series of these combs placed just far enough apart to allow the passage of the bees back to back. A comb, when first completed, is of a dull white color, and not very strong.

The bee is classed among the highest order of insects, and in some respects their instinct seems to differ but little from reason itself. This appears most strikingly in their architecture. Unlike most lower animals, they do not blindly follow their natural instinct, but accommodate themselves to circumstances. Thus they will build straight or crooked, upward or downward, laterally or otherwise, as the occasion seems to demand.—Iowa Homestead.

The Umbrella China Tree.

(MELIA UMBRELLA.)

We have been told that this tree originated at the place of the late ex-Governor Burnett, near San Jacinto, in Texas; that many years ago, in the winter time, on reaching home from an excursion on horseback, he thrust the stick which he had used as a whip into the ground near a spring. The whip grew, was protected, and became a beautiful tree of a strange and peculiar form, and this is the parent of the Umbrella China trees now common in cultivation in many portions of Texas. Its characters are constant, and so marked that any one at a distance can distinguish it from the common China tree even at a glance. It preserves these characters when grown from the seed. At the distance of a few feet from the ground it sends forth numerous branches, the lowest of which are more horizontal than those immediately above them, until the uppermost limbs are nearly vertical—the whole, when in full leaf, forming an umbrella-like head of remarkable symmetry and beauty. The ends of the outer leaves above project more or less over the bases of those beneath them, like the shingles of a roof, forming a shade of the darkest green. The rays of the sun cannot penetrate them, and they even afford protection from a moderate shower.

Of all our deciduous trees, it is certainly the most beautiful. Its dark green leaves, and shape so different from other trees, will always give it a marked and fine appearance in the landscape. It is very hardy, and a very rapid grower when placed in soils of moderate fertility.

Should it maintain its character, which it has already done for many years, let it constitute a new species under the name of Melia Umbrella. Its characters are so marked that any one can distinguish it from the common China tree even in the winter, which is not the case with many admitted species of trees. May not the work of creation be still going on of both plants and animals, from progression to progression, and still the work be so gradual as to fail to attract the attention of short-lived mortals? This view does not detract in the least from the dignity and power of the Almighty; but it rather ought to increase our admiration of him for giving birth to new forms to render the earth more delightful and pleasing to us. Such a creation, or form, is the Umbrella China tree.—Rural Alabamian.

CHERRY TREES.—If you have cherry trees of any kind, and the grass is not already growing all around them, do not fail to sow grass seed—clover is good, with blue grass or timothy—around under them. Do not cultivate the ground around or under them, for experience teaches us that this will destroy the fruit, and perhaps the tree also.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College..... $60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department..... 40 00
Contingent expenses..... 5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $2 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. [illegible] is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its [illegible] atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.
ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of strictly nonsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern School Books which should be should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has continned cloudy and nnsettled, with rain on Saturday, Monday and Tnesday. Onr accounts from the country present no new featnre. Picking appears to have been completed in several localities, and in others is proceeding satisfactorily. The general tenor of the reports is encouraging for a larger yield than was anticipated a short time since, the popular estimate now running from 3,250,000 bales and higher, but not up to 3,500,000. From some points, however, the results have not been np to previous expectations, and the neighboring planters and merchants contend that the prevailing estimates are excessive.

The river is 14 feet below high water mark.

Corron.—The following are the arrivals since the first instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	12,556
Lake		89
Mobile		2,445
Florida		19
Texas		350
Total		15,460

On Saturday the market was quite demoralized by a heavy decline in foreign exchange, and prices exhibited great irregularity, with a general downward tendency, the prices paid being variously at ⅛, ¼@⅜c. decline, closing at a reduction of fully ¼c. The sales embraced 4,250 bales. On Monday a decline at Liverpool and New York gave a further advantage to buyers, and 5,050 bales changed hands at prices requiring a further reduction in quotations of ⅜c. in good ordinary, and ¼c. in other grades, good ordinary closing at 17⅜@17⅝c., low middling at 17⅞@18¼c., middling at 18¼c., strict middling at 18¾c., and good middling at 19@19¼c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but, under the depressing influence of a more stringent money market and increased difficulty in negotiating foreign exchange, factors were under the necessity in some cases of making further concessions, but later in the day the demand became more active, factors exhibited renewed confidence, and prices hardened, closing strong at the qnotations of the preceding day. The sales embraced 5,100 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 189,454 bales, against 113,032 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 183,439 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 78 to Great Britain, and an increase of 51,275 to France, and of 25,863 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	16 @ —
Good ordinary	17¼ @ 17¾
Low middling	17¾ @ 18¼

Sugar.—The new crop is coming in more freely, and the receipts have been sold quite readily at about previous prices. On Tuesday 179 hhds. were received. The demand was fair and the receipts were sold at 7@7¼c. for inferior, 9⅛c. for good fair, 9½c. for fully fair, 9¾@10c. for seconds, 9⅝c. for centrifugal, 10¼@11⅛c. for yellow clarified, and 12c. for white.

Molasses.—The new is now coming in quite liberally, and prices, especially for the low grades, have ruled much easier for buyers. On Tuesday the receipts comprised 647 bbls., which were all sold, but at prices showing a decline of fully 2c. ₱ gallon on the better grades; centrifugal selling at 32, 39 and 45c., fair 52½@58c., prime 64@65c., strictly prime 66c., choice 68c. ₱ gallon, making a total decline since our last review of over 5c. ₱ gallon.

Corn.—On Tuesday 2,000 sacks were sold, in lots, at 67c. for mixed, 68c. for yellow, and 70c. ₱ bushel for white.

Oats.—On Tuesday the market was firmer, with sales of 2,000 sacks, in lots, at 39c. for prime, and 40c. ₱ bushel for choice.

Bran.—The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 1,150 bags, in lots, at $1.02½@1.05 ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday the market was quiet, without any sales of note.

Pork.—The stock on hand is very small. Owing to the scarcity of mess, it is held strongly at $19.50@20 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $19.50@20 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday 50 bbls. mess sold at $19.25 ₱ bbl.

Bacon.—On Tnesday there was a good inquiry for clear sides. The sales embraced 45 casks, in lots, at 7⅞c. for shoulders at the railroad depot, and 12¼c. ₱ lb. for clear sides on the spot.

Hams.—The sales are only in a job way. On Saturday some 36 tierces choice sold, in job lots, at 19½@20c. ₱ lb., and on Tuesday 20 tierces sold at 19¾c. ₱ lb.

Lard.—Tierces, packers', are quoted at 8⅞@9c., refined 9@9½c. ₱ lb., kegs 11c. On Tuesday 50 kegs refined sold at 11c. ₱ lb.

Dry Salt Meat—Is very dull, and only a small retail business is being done by the dealers at 6¼@6½c. ₱ lb. for winter-cured shoulders, and 7@7¼c. for smmmer-cured.

Breakfast Bacon.—Tno market has continued dnll and depressed. Western is quoted at 12@12½c. ₱ lb., Northern 13@13½c. ₱ lb., with only a job business doing. On Saturday a lot of 10 boxes Western sold at 12c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 112¼@112⅜ (with no dispatch from New York,) and closed at 112⅜@112⅝.

In silver we have noticed only retail sales. American half dollars are now quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars nominal at 2@5 ₱ cent. premium in gold for new and old.

Soule's Commercial College,

CORNER OF CAMP AND COMMON STS., (STORY BUILDING,) NEW ORLEANS.

The Commercial Atheneum of the South.

Founded in 1856.....Chartered in 1861.

This is a full-course BUSINESS COLLEGE, complete in all its departments. It is conducted by progressive minds, and as the daily cycles of time roll by the increased wisdom, the improvements and the superior facilities of the age are combined and used to meet the demands of the rising business generation and advance the interests of its patrons.

It is located in the Athens of the great Southwest, and is emphatically the Commercial Atheneum of the South.

It possesses a commercial library, numerous counting rooms and lecture halls, and a proficient and well-appointed faculty. Stores and banks are connected, business regularly transacted, daily lectures given, and all branches practically, scientifically and philosophically taught.

The curriculum of studies is specially arranged to meet the wants of the planter, mechanic and professional man, as well as the merchant and banker. All branches of a thorough English education are taught, and also the higher mathematics, the French, Spanish and German languages.

Ninety-one premiums, gold and silver medals, diplomas, money prizes, silver plate, etc., attest the superior merits of this institution.

Tuition fees low, and scholarships good in thirty-six colleges.

By reason of the nobility and fidelity of the principal and instructors of this institution, and its many truly superior advantages, it has gained an unsurpassed popularity, and through nearly sixteen years of prosperous business it has enjoyed the almost unbounded confidence of the business community.

For circulars call at the College office, or address GEO. SOULE, Principal.

N. B.—Soule's Analytic and Philosophic Commercial and Exchange Calculator (880 octavo pages,) the great arithmetical work of the age, and which no student, teacher, accountant or business man should be without, is for sale at principal stationers and at the office of Soule's Commercial College. oc17 1m

Treat the Human Machine Gently.—The winding passage, thirty feet in length, through which the main portion of the waste matter of the system is discharged, is lined with a membrane as delicate as silk, and as sensitive as a net-work of nerves can make it. Neither constipation, colic, diarrhea, dysentery or any other bowel complaint can be cured by abusing and convulsing this tender membrane with a furious purgative. The best and safest remedy in such cases is that mild balsamic and delightful tonic laxative,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient,

which heals, tones and invigorates the irritated intestines, while it relieves them from the morbid humors which provoke abdominal disease. Sold by all druggists. oc31 4t

METZ'S ARMENIAN HAIR VIGOR contains no lead or other corrosive mineral substance. The cheapest and best preparation for preserving, restoring and beautifying the Hair ever invented. It gives new vigor and vitality to the hair follicles, prevents its turning gray or falling off, and completely eradicates dandruff, etc. Try it! Price, 75 cents. Ask for Metz's. Take no other! Also ZOZOZONTZ, or Botanic Specific Cure for Toothache, Headache, etc. Never known to fail in giving instant relief in one minute, without danger. Will eradicate Pimples, Tetter, Freckles, Moth Patches, Tan, Sunburn, Black heads or Grubs, Roughness and all Cutaneous affections and discolorations of the Skin, so harassing and disagreeable to a beautiful complexion. It contains no creosote, chlorotorm, corrosive sublimate, or any material injurious to health or beauty. Can be taken internally for Sick Stomach, Cramps and pains in the Bowels. LOUIS S. METZ, proprietor. Laboratory, corner of Bienville and Prieur streets. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., Agents, New Orleans. For sale by druggists and perfumers everywhere. oc31 6m

THE UPPER CITY HOTEL,

SITUATED UPON TWO LINES OF DOUBLE-track railroad, within fifteen minutes' ride of Canal street. Possesses all the conveniences of city life, combined with country pleasantry. The rooms are magnificently furnished, and there is nothing that obstructs the view to the private gardens surrounding the Hotel. Surrounded by a veranda twelve feet wide, two hundred and fifty feet in length, affording a magnificent promenade for the guests of the Hotel. The situation and convenience, with a good table, affords the Proprietor the pleasant duty of naming "THE UPPER CITY" a first-class Family Hotel. We allow our accommodations and our attentions a full guarantee against the influence of runners. It requires but to see and be pleased. oc17 3m

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

As an Invigorator, Liver Corrector and Blood Renovator is superior to all the bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use. It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is permanent and lasting.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

MEDICAL.

DR. D. JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE

WILL

BUILD UP THE SYSTEM,

PURIFY THE BLOOD,

AND

EXCITE THE ABSORBENTS TO

HEALTHY ACTION.

DR. D. JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE

IS A STANDARD MEDICINE:

a compound of those articles which long experience has proven to possess the most safe and efficient alterative and deobstruent properties, and containing no concealed poisons, no mercurial or other metallic preparations. Having before us the testimonials of thousands of persons who have been restored to sound health from its use, it is recommended to the afflicted with entire confidence as to its ability to effectually eradicate from the human system the diseases for whose cure it is designed.

For Purifying the Blood

the Alterative will be found to be a most effective medicine. Acting directly on the circulation, it purifies the blood, and passes with it into every tissue and fiber of the body, removing every particle of disease from the system.

FOR SCROFULA IN ALL ITS FORMS,

whether Ulcerations of the Flesh or Bones, Enlargement of the Joints, Glands, Swellings, Eruptions, Tumors, etc., the Alterative has been found pre-eminently successful. By its action on the blood it destroys the virus or poisonous principle from which these diseases originate.

FOR SKIN DISEASES,

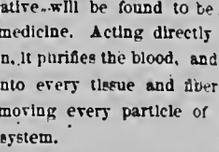
the immediate cause of which is always found to be an obstructed state of the pores, JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE is a certain remedy. It not only removes the obstinate state of the pores, but it frees the blood and perspiration from all impurities and gross particles, which are so liable to obstruct the small perspiratory organs.

All Dr. D. Jayne & Son's Family Medicines are sold by our Agents in New Orleans,

E. J. HART & Co., 73 Tchoupitoulas St.,

and by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. se5 2m

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S



CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eyes a Plant, which requires moisture.

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the slight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloodstreaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

Price, Twenty-five cents per bottle. Sold by druggists. E. J. HART & Co., Wholesale Agents,

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1872. NO. 46.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 6.—General Meade died this morning of pneumonia.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Mr. Greeley resumes the editorship of the Tribune, which he relinquished to embark in another line of business. The Tribune hereafter will be a thoroughly independent journal. Manton Marble, restored to health, resumes the management of the World to-morrow.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—There have been two hundred deaths from horse disease during the past two days.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 8.—The steamer Katie, with four hundred bales of cotton and one hundred and fifty passengers, struck the wreck of the Lucy Holcombe, above Helena, at two o'clock this morning, and sunk. No lives lost and no further particulars.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 9.—A dispatch from Helena says the cargo of the Katie will be saved, except the cotton in the hold, which will be slightly damaged, but ultimately saved. The machinery, furniture and stateroom doors are all that can be saved of the boat.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 9.—Brown, Democrat, is elected Governor by three to five thousand. Greeley's majority, eight thousand. Whitborne is elected in the sixth district. The Republicans and Independents have the Legislature.

BOSTON, Nov. 9, 9 P. M.—A very extensive conflagration is now raging at the corner of Summer and Kingston streets. The fire extends east and west on Kingston street and north and south on Summer street. Engines are hauled by hand. The property burning is all dry goods stores.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—The conflagration was checked at one o'clock today, after fifteen hours' havoc, and after having destroyed hundreds of the costliest buildings in the country, and having temporarily paralyzed the shoe and leather, wool and dry goods trades. Not one wholesale shoe and leather establishment is left. The wool houses suffered in like manner; and the dry goods jobbing houses are few and far between. The Ninth Regiment, with detachments from other regiments, is on duty protecting property.

Three square miles burned; fire still raging. Postoffice, with most of Congress street, will go.

Later.—The fire has reached dimensions that simply defy description. The people of Boston find themselves in danger of their lives. Loss of houses and property now scarcely thought of. The people are retiring before the flames toward Tremont and Court streets, which the fire is supposed to be unable to reach; but a gale is blowing and seems to have no positive direction. Probably Faneuil Hall and Quincy Market will go. The Union Telegraph office was abandoned at half-past eight.

BOSTON, Nov. 11.—Nine hundred and thirty business houses and firms were destroyed, and sixty dwelling and lodging houses. The fire is now confined to the ruins. No apprehensions. A large number of engines are on the watch.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 12.—The hippophlgia is spreading rapidly among the horses. Fifty belonging to the transfer company were attacked today. Many mules reported sick.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 12.—The horse epidemic is on the increase here. Cars on three lines are taken off. Other lines are running, but with reduced forces. Hack horses mainly withdrawn. Transfer and heer wagons are hauled by oxen. The fire department is organizing fire companies of fifty to one hundred men to draw engines in the event of a fire.

PARSONS, KAN., Nov. 12.—The Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad is now complete to within eleven miles of Red river. The bridge across that stream is rapidly being built. The Texas Central railroad will be completed to Dennison by the first of January next. The gap between the two roads now is only forty-two miles.

FOREIGN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 9.—An English steamer arrived here on Wednesday from Malta, having on board twenty slaves to be disposed of here. A very brisk slavo trade is carried on between Tripoli and Constantinople by way of Malta.

MADRID, Nov. 9.—In the Cortes yesterday the motion made for the suppression of lotteries, and another motion to reduce the number of cabinet ministers to five, were defeated. The proposition to abolish the tobacco monopoly was rejected.

FROM THE WORK.

WHITE PLAINS CHURCH, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The long-expected blessing has come. On the twenty-sixth of October we commenced a meeting at White Plains church. The meeting was continued until Tuesday. God gloriously revived his people, and the Holy Spirit overshadowing us, we sat together in heavenly places. Six joined the church, and seven professed a change of heart. May God still bless the people of White Plains church!

Yours fraternally,

DAVID MERCHANT, P. C.

JACKSON CO., MISS., Oct. 31, 1872.

BELMONT CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The present Conference year has been one of severe personal and family affliction with us. During most of the spring and the entire summer we were unable to do any work; but out of it all the Lord has brought us safely. We have just closed a series of revival meetings, much to our religious comfort, and we trust also to the building up of the church. At Belmont there were twelve conversions and as many accessions; at Wesley chapel there were several conversions and two accessions; and at Brewersville there were three conversions and four accessions. The church at each place was much revived. The work, as a whole, shows signs of prosperity both financially and spiritually, and we hope the Belmont circuit will soon resume its former position and rank among the circuits of the Conference.

SALEM (NEAR MOSS POINT), MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: The last night, at the close of the meeting, we had a Benjamin's mess. Our aged Bro. Wimbish, preacher in charge of Greene mission, conducted the exercises. The arbor was lighted up at the usual hour, and the sacramental table was spread, Bro. Wimbish officiating. Some sixty communicants presented themselves. Our brother, fresh from the emblems of Christ's death and suffering, ascended the pulpit and spoke nearly as follows: "My friends, listen to the counsels of age. I feel for you all the affections of a father, and I exhort you, as though you were my own erring children, to come to the Lord. Certain it is I shall not stand before you many more times; and to some of you this is perhaps the last time. I feel a great desire to pray for you before we part. Will you meet me in the altar? This is the last night of our camp meeting. Let me persuade you, let me beg you to come to Jesus." He then came down, and when the singing commenced there was a rush for the altar. They continued coming until there was no room, and many bowed out in the congregation. Thirteen joined the church, and at least ten professed religion.

FOREST CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Knowing you love to hear good news from various quarters, especially the patronizing Conferences, I take time to send you a short account of the Lord's dealings with us since we commenced our protracted meetings. The Lord has graciously revived his work in these ends of the earth. Forty-nine accessions to the church, and between twenty-five and thirty conversions, and still they come. Old fathers in Israel say they never witnessed such demonstrations of the Spirit before. At the Carr church every sinner was brought to feel the need of a Savior, and bowed for prayer. At one other appointment every regular mourner was converted, and the last night I preached there was not an unconverted adult in the house. A clean sweep, this. God has graciously watered us with the dews of heaven, and its influence is seen and felt almost over the entire circuit. Mr. Editor, methinks if you had been with us you would have been very much impressed with Isaiah's vision of the rise and progress of the Christian dispensation.—Isaiah xxxv, 1. We did not only rejoice and blossom as the rose, but God has cemented us in brotherly love. May it so continue to the end. Bros. McDaniel and Sibley, itinerants, and Bros. Wingfield, Gardner and Weems, local, assisted and preached with great power and acceptability. May God continue to bless their labors.

OCTOBER 24, 1872.

LOWER PEACH TREE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed a series of protracted meetings on my work—first, at Ashury church, where we had a most gracious revival; then at Kirk's school house, where we had a refreshing season; then at Liberty, where we were wonderfully blessed with the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and where as many as thirteen were added to the church; next at Airmount. There was quite a good feeling in the congregation, and many of the church members were wonderfully blessed. On Monday night, the meeting was of necessity closed, leaving quite a number of penitents at the altar. In fact at all of the above-mentioned meetings were many anxious inquirers who, we trust, ere long will find the pearl of great price. I am glad to say, in conclusion, that there is quite a revival influence all over the work. May the Lord abundantly bless!

I would here say that although much of our best lands were entirely covered by water during the late freshet on the Alabama river, and many of our planters lost almost their entire crops, yet the finances of the circuit are coming up well.

L. Brewer & Co., Hargrove, Little & Co., Dr. F. E. Davidson, W. B. Vail and W. L. Baker joined in sending me a nice bill of family groceries. That the Lord may bless and prosper them, both temporally and spiritually, is the prayer of many friends in this vicinity.

A. C. HUNDLEY, P. C.

BROOKHAVEN ITEMS—WHITWORTH COLLEGE, ETC.—Mr. Editor: This missionary reports success. "The people have a mind to work." Our church built. Six-sevenths of the money raised to build another on the border; under contract, now being built. Judge M. says he will give the lumber and the land upon which to build another. Three good congregations; a circuit will be reported. It is generally conceded that he who hath the "care of the churches" is wielding a power for Christ, in the way of Methodism, unsurpassed by any of his predecessors. It is supposed that we will have his services only for this year, as he is greatly lacking in two important points, namely, inclination and ability to serve without his expenses being met.

The college has by no means opened as its merits deserve; still the president has ten chairs filled, one hundred and forty-seven scholars, eighty-seven boarders—a few more could be accommodated—and over eighty music pupils. The college justly merits an endowment of $100,000. It is thought that if the president would turn out for twelve months, Mississippians would give him the money; but if not, the hundred Methodist ministers could raise it if they would. If so, an arrangement might be perfected by which their daughters could be graduated. "What is so little among so many?" "Much every way." If Christ should honor the "breaking" of this intellectual bread, many "baskets full" of fragments would be taken up. It is not claimed that this is the best institution in the South. Macon, Georgia, has largely the start in age and money. It takes time to build up a literary institution.

The pastor of the church here is very popular. The church is in about as prosperous a condition as could be expected under the circumstances. The preaching, the praying, and indeed the paying, seems, with some trifling assistance from the missionary, to be almost all done by the pastor. It is supposed, however, that he will be handsomely paid this fall. Dr. Martin still presides over the Sunday school. This is the Sabbath school of the Mississippi Conference. The singing of the children is about as delightful as anything can be on earth's side of heaven.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., Oct. 23, 1872.

MARIANNA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The sixth District Conference of the Marianna district, Alabama Conference, was held at Ozark, Alabama, October 4 and 5, 1872. The presiding elder, Rev. Angus Dowling, occupied the chair. The attendance was not good, only a small proportion of the lay members being present. The presiding elder made special inquiry in regard to class meetings. The reports given on this subject disclose these facts: Class meetings are very much neglected; some are not in favor of them. In most instances the pastors had not given them much attention. One serious difficulty in all the charges is to get competent, faithful class leaders. A resolution was passed committing the members of the conference to more earnest efforts to establish and improve class meetings.

Reports on the subject of missions showed that the people are in favor of them; but the collections have been small, owing to scarcity of money. The pastors had not made any vigorous efforts to raise missionary funds, but were hopeful of yet being able to do more for this cause. There has been some improvement on the missionary work within the district.

As to the financial systems, the reports show that there is no uniform plan followed by the stewards of the various charges. The plan of assessing each member at the beginning of the year, and collecting quarterly, where pursued, succeeded well. Upon most of the works the collections are made at random, and often deferred till the end of the year. A resolution was adopted commending the assessment plan to the stewards of all the charges.

The claims of our Conference schools, male and female, were presented and urged as in every way worthy of the patronage of Methodist people.

The Sunday school work, as reported, is not very extensive. There is a want of earnest workers. The uniform lessons have not been adopted to a great extent, but where used they meet with favor.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: L. M. Edwards, A. R. Godwin, Rev. H. Metcalf, W. S. Coxe, Reserves—J. S. Edwards, N. P. Dowling.

A. S. DOUGLAS, Sec.

MORE FROM WINNSBORO, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: Since my last communication we have had gracious revival seasons all around the circuit, commencing with our second Quarterly Conference, at Hurricane, June 28 and 29, at which place and time there were twenty-eight accessions and a number of conversions. The church was greatly revived, and a deep religious interest pervaded the entire community. At the same place, but at a subsequent time, there were thirteen accessions and nearly as many conversions.

From the Quarterly Conference meeting at the place named we came to this place, and commenced a meeting, which lasted eleven days. There was preaching at eleven A. M. and seven P. M. daily, which resulted in forty-two accessions and twenty-five or thirty conversions. A more general revival influence I never witnessed. Some of the oldest citizens said they never witnessed the like in Winnsboro before. During these meetings Bros. Daves, the presiding elder, and J. L. Wright, from the Rayville circuit, were with us, and rendered valuable service both in the pulpit and altar.

On the fourteenth of September, assisted by Bro. M. C. Manly, we commenced a meeting at Magnolia, seven miles east of this place, on Bayou Macon, which lasted seven days. Bros. J. L. Wright and T. J. Upton, agent of Homer College, came in on Monday evening, and preached faithfully and with acceptability to the close, on Thursday. The result was forty-four accessions, forty-one conversions, and the membership greatly revived.

On the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth, the time of our third Quarterly Conference, we commenced a meeting at Oakley. Bros. Daves, the presiding elder, and James L. Wright were with us, and were abundant in labors. Our meeting closed on Thursday, October 3. There were twenty-five accessions and about ten conversions, and we closed the meeting with about forty penitents at the altar.

Thence we went to Tarver's school house, on the fourth, and commenced a meeting, which lasted four days. Bro. McClendon was with us, and labored incessantly, and to profit. Results: forty accessions and about twenty conversions.

Well, now, Mr. Editor, you will perceive that during this series of protracted meetings, extending from the twenty-eighth of June to the seventh of October, in the bounds of the Winnsboro circuit there have been one hundred and ninety-two accessions to the church, and one hundred and sixteen conversions to God. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." It does seem that our God has said to our beloved Zion: "Arise and shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

J. M. MCKEE, P. C.

WINNSBORO, LA., Oct. 15, 1872.

ABOUT eighty Indians of the Warm Springs reservation have recently joined a praying band. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are making fine progress in spiritual matters under the Christian management of Captain John Smith.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

HOLSTON CONFERENCE.

The forty-ninth session of the Holston Conference convened in Chattanooga, Tennessee, October 25, 1872, Bishop Doggett presiding. Fifty-nine preachers and fourteen laymen were present as members of the Conference, besides several visitors and undergraduates.

J. W. Dickey read his report as treasurer of the Board of Missions, showing collections during the year to be $2,145 45.

F. Alexander read report of Joint Board of Finance, item by item, showing that the preachers had received seventy-four per cent. of their salaries.

J. R. Payne presented the report of numbers in the church, showing a net gain of over three thousand members during the year.

Marion, Virginia, was selected as the place for the next session of the Conference.

J. S. Kennedy, chairman of the Committee on Communication from Holston Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, presented the majority report of the committee, which was read by E. C. Reeves. A minority report was read, which, on motion, was adopted as a substitute for the majority report. The request to appoint a committee of five to confer with the committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church was not agreed to.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

The twenty-sixth session, and the second since the division of the St. Louis Conference, was held at Arcadia, October 16-20, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding. Bishop E. M. Marvin was present during a part of the session, and participated in the duties of the chair.

Admitted on trial—Lafayette Hull, George H. Adams, James E. Tribble. Remaining on trial—J. A. Russell, Alexander M. Robinson, J. F. Gourley. Superannuated—Christian Baker, W. R. Babcock, J. N. W. Springer, John Thomas. Died—Joseph Boyle and M. G. McAlister, who was on probation. The names of all the preachers were called one by one, and their characters examined and passed. Members, 9,537; local preachers, 90; infants baptized, 524; adults baptized, 690; number of Sunday schools, 71; number of Sunday school teachers, 618; scholars, 3,096; amount necessary for superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of deceased preachers, $3,200; amount raised, $955.

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.

The thirty-sixth session of the Arkansas Conference was held in Bentonville, Arkansas, October 16-20, Bishop Wightman presiding, and Isham L. Barrow secretary. The clerical members generally were in attendance, and in good health and spirits. The lives of all the preachers had been mercifully preserved during the past year. There was a good attendance of lay delegates.

Admitted on trial—J. B. Hickman, T. M. C. Birmingham, J. R. N. Bell, W. S. Derrick. Superannuated—Jesse Griffin, S. P. Farrish. Numbers in the Conference—local preachers, 131; members—10,792 white, 3 Indians, 22 colored. Baptized—410 infants, 884 adults. Sunday schools, 108; teachers, 568; scholars, 4,451. Conference collection, $362 35. Missions, $498.60.

WHITE RIVER CONFERENCE.

The third session of the White River Conference met at Augusta, October 30, Bishop Wightman presiding, and was opened with religious exercises conducted by the Bishop, who read a portion of the tenth chapter of Romans, after which the two hundred and seventy-second hymn was sung.

The report of the Committee on Statistics was presented, and, having been read, was corrected and adopted. This report gives: White members, 9,413; colored, 11; local preachers, 107; infant baptisms, 301; adult baptisms, 809; number of churches, 92; value of churches, $19,875; number of parsonages, 2; value, $1,000; other church property, $2,800; Sunday schools, 100; scholars, 4,625; books sold, $617.50; periodicals taken, 811.

THE HORSE SICKNESS is raging in Cincinnati, Louisville and Charleston, and will probably reach the Southwest in a short time. It is making its way South slowly, and it will be well for our people to make such preparations as they can for its advent. Horse-flesh will be more prized than ever after this—almost as highly as King Richard's desperate appeal: "A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!" The worth of the noble animal will appear in a new light when for the want of him the plow stands rusting in the furrow, and the staples of commerce lie rotting upon the wharves.

THE GREAT FIRE in Boston has been the most general topic during the last few days. The solid men of Boston are the chief sufferers, the calamity falling upon the wealthy, for the most part, and occasioning no such distress as in the Chicago conflagration. The loss is variously estimated at from one to two hundred millions. It is a matter of surprise that such a fire could take place in a city so substantially built, and reputed to be the most sober and well-governed city in America.

EXPLOSION OF A KEROSINE BARREL.—An employe on Point Baker's plantation, twelve miles below Algiers, Louisiana, on the river, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 6, between three and four o'clock, lighted a lamp and placed it on the head of a barrel of kerosene oil in Mr. Baker's sugar-house. The flames from the lamp communicated with the oil in the barrel and set it on fire, when an explosion was the result. In a short while the whole building was on fire and was totally destroyed. The man who lighted the lamp was burned to death in the sugar-house.

EDUCATIONAL DONATION.—George E. M. Walton, of Hanover county, Virginia, has donated $1,000 to Randolph Macon College, to create and endow what shall be called the Walton Greek Library.

AT a recent examination of Pencilers at Newburg, New York, ninety-four of them spelled the word "cachination" fifty different ways.

GONE.

Mother, thou hast left us, and alone
Passed into the mystery of the great unKnown;
So joy has vanished, and we sit and moan
As the shadows hide thee from us.

Can nothing call thee back again?
Not e'en the agony of pain,
That quivers through the sad refrain,
Our hearts' wail after thee?

Many sorrows hath the soul to bear,
Much blasting of its visions fair;
None greater than that death should tear
From our embrace our mother.

Our hearts cry out in weary pain!
They call for thee in plaintive strain!
And yet there comes not back again
E'en an echo from the darkness.

There doth come a voice, full of comfort and feeling,
If we listen aright, from our mother stealing,
Dispersing all anguish, its banishment sealing:
"I am forever with the Lord."

Amen, loved mother! yea, so let it be!
God be praised it is so well with thee!
Patient we'll wait till he bid shadows flee,
And let us find our mother.

The Orchard-Graves History of the Baptist Church Examined.—No. III.

MR. EDITOR: In my last I took occasion to show up some of the evidences upon which Orchard-Graves based his Baptist Church history. I will now proceed to give the reader a few more of the consistencies of this so-called historian.

"It is stated that a country minister, named Fides, wrote a letter to Cyprian in 257, to ascertain how soon after birth children might be baptized. The existence of such a letter has been questioned; and Jortin admits that some statements of Cyprian's are not to be credited (notwithstanding 'he was a paragon to clergymen of every age,') and particularly since many of the fathers of this age contradict themselves and each other. But admitting all the circumstances to be correct, the inquiry proves that the subject was novel and the practice unestablished. Cyprian, not having any such practice in the church at Carthage, could not answer this letter. He consequently called together, in a private way, those brethren in the vicinity, and to them he submitted the business." Now, right in the face of this statement, it is notorious that the predecessor of Cyprian (Tertullian) wrote a treatise against infant baptism. We have already adverted to the interview between him and Quintilla; but this would-be historian says that "Cyprian, not having any such practice in the church at Carthage, could not answer the letter." How could Tertullian combat or write against a practice that did not exist? The fact that he opposed it is significant of its existence.—Pages 77 and 78. He goes on to say: "Here infant baptism is entirely different from that proposed in the time of Tertullian. That was the baptism of little ones, who asked to be baptized; this of new-born babes." Well, let us see. In a foot-note to page 79 he says: "It was during the agitation of this question in the East that Quintilla made her inquiry, and what might have encouraged her to submit her anxieties to Tertullian was the report that in the African churches, particularly at Carthage and Alexandria, a great many infants were employed in the church as readers." Now here is evidently an attempt to deceive, and to give to the term infants a meaning that is unwarranted. Every well-informed man on this subject knows that in the days of the apostles, as well as in those of Moses and the prophets, the term was limited from birth to the age of three or four years; that the weaning time was extended to three years, and all within that time were called infants. But here our author would make us believe "that a great many infants were employed in the church as readers." Oh! shame on such attempts to deceive the unwary. "Now Eustathius and Phavorinus state that an infant or babe is brephos, 'a new-born child, nourished by the teat from his birth until he be four years old.' The Greeks extended infancy to four years of age, the Jews only to three years. On what pretense have some affirmed that infancy in the gospel times extended to the age of twenty or twenty-one? and that brephos, brephyllion are used indiscriminately for minors, whether they be twenty days or twenty years old? The testimony of Eustathius and Phavorinus proves that an infant is such only to the age of four years at the utmost."—Taylor on Apos. Bap., page 80.

"Irenæus," says Taylor, "may be considered as a kind of grandson of the Apostle John; for Polycarp was intimate with John, and Irenæus was the disciple of Polycarp. He was a man of an inquisitive mind, and diligently treasured up the discourses of his master, which he repeated from the apostles. These are not only in perfect concord with the language of John, but are a convincing commentary on it."

"Irenæus contemplated men in all conditions of life; are, then, youths, children, little ones, or infants, men?" We subjoin the arrangement of Irenæus and John, as given by Taylor:

Years of age.	Irenæus.	John.
Birth to 3 or 4 years	Infants.	.....
3 or 4 years to 6 or 7	Little ones.	Little children.
6 or 7 to 12 or 13	Children.
12 or 13 to 18 or 20	Youths.	Young men.
18 or 20 to elder life	Seniors.	Fathers.

—"Is it possible to produce a closer commentary more accurately in unison with the sentiments, the language and feelings of the inspired apostle, who was the affectionate disciple of the most benevolent of masters?" The Baptists insinuate that this distribution of the ages of life was a peculiarity of Irenæus. What will they do with the apostle?—make the same remark as to him? But Xenephon, Cyropædia, Book I, "describes four stages of life popularly distinguished among the Persians: Childhood, youth, mature age and eldership, or the time which was past military service." But I want my Baptist friends to understand that they are on trial now, and it is not their province exactly to choose their own witnesses.

We have, perhaps, devoted more time and research to Orchard-Graves than he merits. If any persons are disposed to read him, let me advise them to do it carefully and critically, and they will find my strictures to be true.

He, in his efforts to establish connection with the apostles, has pursued a most tortuous route, and, in spite of his efforts to the contrary, has unwittingly run into the Catholic Church, and is there lost. His testimony reminds me of the negro witness. His master was a great hunter, and was very fond of astonishing his neighbors by the recital of some of his great exploits. On one occasion a neighbor came in, to whom he related the story of having killed a buck by shooting it in the head and the hind foot with the same ball. The neighbor was incredulous. He called up his servant Pomp and said: "Pomp, do you remember the deer I killed, and shot him in the head and the hind foot at the same time?" "Yes, sa, mighty well," replied Pomp. "How could that be, Pomp?" inquired the neighbor. "Well, sa, it was jis so: the buck was scratching his head wid his hind foot when massa shoot him." "Well, that may explain it." After the neighbor left Pomp approached his master and said: "Massa, next time you tell a big story, please put him closer togedder, for I had mighty hard work to fotch him up dat time."

JOHN SAMPLE.

OUR FOREIGN LETTER.

The Rev. Luke H. Wiseman, A. M., was elected president of the English Wesleyan Conference, and the Rev. G. T. Perks, A. M., secretary. These two ministers entered the ministry in the same year (1840,) and have been for several years past located at the Wesleyan Mission House, London, as members of the secretariat. Mr. Wiseman was secretary of the Conference when elected president. So was his predecessor; Dr. J. H. James, and it is very probable Mr. Perks will succeed Wiseman in the chair of the Conference. Mr. Wiseman is a more popular preacher than Perks, but not so able nor so profound a thinker. Mr. Wiseman was editor-in-chief of the Methodist Recorder, London, until his departure to attend the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Perks has edited it since that time, and will continue to do so until Mr. Wiseman's presidential year shall have expired.

Three ministers seceded to other bodies during the year, and two were received from other churches. Seventy-three young men were ordained by the laying on of hands, and as many were received on trial as candidates for the ministry.

A lectureship has been established in connection with the Conference, by a rich layman, for the purpose of elucidating and expounding the fundamental doctrines of Christianity from an Armiuian standpoint. Dr. Osborne delivered the first lecture, on the Holy Ghost; the Rev. William B. Pope the second, on the Person of the Son of God; the Rev. John Lomas, theological tutor of Headingly College, the third this year, on the Atonement. The venerable and able minister treated his subject very ably, but it is impossible to give it an exhaustive treatment in one lecture. Dr. James H. Rigg, the English correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate, and formerly the English correspondent of your paper, does Mr. Lomas and his lecture very great injustice in one of his letters to the Advocate. He intimates that Mr. Lomas is not qualified to do justice to such a subject in face of the objections of the present time. Dr. Rigg is entitled to his opinion, but it is just possible that the doctor expected to deliver the lecture himself, and that in his disappointment he was unable to do justice to Mr. Lomas. Mr. Farrar will deliver the next lecture. Each lecturer receives fifty pounds, or thereabouts. Dr. Rigg's "Modern Anglican Theology" was handled with very great severity by one of the ablest and most vigorous critics of the age, Rev. David Thomas, D. D., of London, editor of the Homilist. Dr. Rigg has lost in popularity since the education movement began to be discussed, in consequence of being found in the denominational ship with Dr. Manning, the papist archbishop of Westminster, and Cardinal Cullen, of Dublin. He will possibly be elected president at some time, and ranks high outside of Methodism as a thinker and theologian. His account of the education debate in the Conference, to the New York paper, is intensely one-sided and unfair. He treats Mr. Arthur with a scant critical courtesy, which the latter will acutely feel, as he is peculiarly susceptible to annoyance by opposing and adverse comment.

The Revs. William B. Pope and Gervase Smith were appointed to accompany the president to the next Irish Conference, which will meet in Cork. Mr. Pope is one of the ablest, most scholarly and critical theologians of English Methodism, and is thoroughly acquainted with the most advanced phases of modern thought. His Fernley lecture on the Person of Christ is a masterpiece. It has been enlarged and published in a small volume by the Book-Room. It should be in the hands of all your young ministers, and old ones too. Dr. Redford should issue a reprint of it forthwith. Mr. Smith is one of those noisy, boisterous, superficial, popular men, to be found in every denomination, who occupy, to the astonishment of every one, the highest positions of trust and influence, and who manage to discharge satisfactorily and successfully the duties of every office they fill. The very ministers by whose suffrages Mr. Smith has risen would indorse the opinion I have expressed. In appearance and physical build he is a thorough John Bull. He squints with one eye and looks askance with both when facing an audience. He will possibly be president in 1874, unless Punshon's return home interrupts the regular course of succession in relation to the chair of the assembly. He was popular as a preacher and lecturer a few years ago, but his services are not now in as great request. He is secretary of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund, and as such has rendered efficient and laudable service to London Methodism.

In the mortuary list for the year we find the names of Richard Felvus, Elijah Hoole, D. D., James Dixon, D. D., and Thomas Vasey, all eminent men and able in their day—Felvus as a much-beloved pastor; Hoole as a missionary secretary for forty years, and a ripe Oriental scholar; Dixon as a massive and philosophical thinker, and an eloquent and imperial pulpit orator; and Vasey as a divine of rich and varied attainments. To these may be added the name of John Wesley Thomas, who was superior to any of those I have named in a knowledge of ancient and modern languages. His translation of Dante is considered the best condense of that lurid poet extant.

Few of the officers of the Conference and connection have been changed. John Lomas has been succeeded in the theological chair of Headingly College by John G. Geden, an accomplished scholar, who made a tour of the United States two years ago. Dr. Jobson continues at the Book-Room, and the two Benjamins (Frankland and Gregory) to edit the magazines and periodicals.

There was a decrease in the membership, which gave rise to a long and earnest conversation.

MY FIELD IN LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: In response to my letter which appeared in the ADVOCATE of August 8, I have received a great many letters from Texas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida and Louisiana, making further inquiries concerning this country. You will please allow me to answer some of them through your valuable paper.

First, in answer to our brethren in the ministry. Since writing my former letter I have conferred closely with my presiding elder, Rev. Fred. White, by whom I am assured that there is a call within the bounds of the Alexandria district for eight additional traveling preachers. From Harrisonburg, on the Ouachita, passing down, embracing all the Black river country, taking all the Red river bottom below Alexandria, and down the Mississippi more than two hundred miles, and all the country back to Calcasieu river, a distance of more than a hundred miles, and in this vast country—I suppose the finest in the world—we have seven itinerant preachers! So you will perceive the country described in my former communication is only on the edge of this wonderful country, which has been brought to light by further inquiries. Hence you will not be astonished when I tell you that my presiding elder is often compelled to travel at the midnight hour and at the early dawn, and often sleeps by the wayside while his horse feeds, not having time to arouse the family, lest he should fail to meet his appointments. This, brethren, is the wide door that is open and awaits your coming. All of this country south of Red river is without a local preacher. "Whom shall I send? and who will go for us?"

In reference to lands, I now say deliberately that I have traveled through Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama and Florida, and here is the finest opening that I have ever met. The rich alluvial lands rate from $3 to $50 per acre, and can be purchased in lots of forty acres to one thousand or more. Public lands are abundant, and homesteads of eighty acres in the swamps, and one hundred and sixty in the high pine land, may be taken at merely nominal rates. So there is a home for all, with health, good water and a field for usefulness. Should the paradox arise that any man should fail to be pleased east of the Calcasieu, all the region beyond, away to the "drooping west," an empire breaks upon your view. Texas, the land of happy spirits, becomes your home.

REV. J. NICHOLSON, P. E., SUMMIT DIST., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: You have had a hasty synopsis of the proceedings of the Summit District Conference. Some important items were omitted, because their publication was not really necessary and to avoid prolixity. One particular item was reserved for a separate communication, which I now give. After the business was finished the president was requested to vacate the chair before reading the minutes, and he withdrew, leaving Rev. J. H. Muse in the chair. The following preamble and resolutions were then presented by Rev. B. Jones, and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Rev. J. Nicholson has been emphatically a traveling preacher for thirty consecutive years, and himself and his self-sacrificing wife have never during that time received more than the mere necessaries of life; moving almost yearly all over the Mississippi Conference, and from one extreme to the other, when called to do so by the appointing power; surrendering friends, incurring enormous expense, selling one thing after another for the purpose of defraying necessary expenses, until they have now sold all, and are now involved in debt, without a home at which, in their age, to rest and die; AND WHEREAS, Their health is very precarious, and the extensive travel has otherwise injured Bro. Nicholson's bodily powers, the time will soon come when his labors will necessarily be curtailed; therefore, be it

Resolved, As a testimonial of our appreciation of his constant labors, and of the fidelity with which he has discharged his duty as pastor and presiding elder, the privations and sacrifices he has made for the cause of Christ, and the losses sustained by himself and wife:

1. That we, the members of the Summit District Conference, will use our best efforts to raise means to purchase a residence for them.

2. That the pastors of our several charges in this district be and are hereby requested to take a copy of the preamble and resolutions and solicit subscriptions of our members and friends to carry out these wishes of the District Conference, and that they pay over to the committee appointed.

3. That Bros. V. J. Wroten, Robert Babington, John Ballard, William H. Tillery, R. K. Felder, David McGee, James H. Muse, J. W. Sandell, C. S. Stewart and G. T. Vickers be a committee to consult with Bro. Nicholson in the selection of an eligible place of residence as a donation from the undersigned.

The committee is organized. Rev. J. H. Muse, of Greensburg, Louisiana, is chairman, and Bro. C. S. Stewart, of Amite City, Louisiana, is secretary and treasurer. Subscriptions have commenced and the list is increasing. Although this laudable design originated in the Summit district, it was supposed that the many friends in other parts of the Annual Conference where Bro. Nicholson labored in his stronger days would wish to aid in settling his family comfortably now, and would be anxious to contribute something. We therefore extend the request to them to do so. Communications addressed to C. S. Stewart, Amite City, Louisiana, will be properly acknowledged.

MAGNOLIA, MISS., Oct. 29, 1872.

"MY SON," said a fond papa, who was looking over the lesson his boy had recited that day, "how did you manage when your teacher asked you to spell metempsychosis?" "O father!" said the boy, "I just stood spell-bound."

A FRIEND should be one in whose understanding and virtue we can equally confide, and whose opinion we can value at once for its justness and sincerity.

A YEAR'S WORK.

Five more trips, thought I to myself as I mounted my faithful nag to start to my appointment, on the first instant, thirty miles from home. Five trips more, said I to my wife as I bid her adieu, and turned my back upon my home to meet my engagements. Five trips more, and then what? Why I will have done my year's work so far as attending to the pastoral duties of my present charge is concerned. I will have preached my last sermon, I will have made my last pastoral visit, I will have instructed the children of my charge for the last time, during the present ecclesiastical year.

That expression, "five trips more," has been ringing in my ears almost constantly ever since I left home. The inquiry has arisen in my mind: Have I done my work well? Could I not have done it better? Have I embraced every opportunity for doing good? Has my time been well spent? Alas! I fear I have not been as faithful and true as I ought to have been. Have I spoken an untimely word? Have I lost a single opportunity for doing good? Have I visited from house to house, praying with and for the women and children of my charge? Have I met all my engagements? Have I fulfilled all my appointments? Have I been diligent? Have I been instant in season and out of season? Have I reproved, rebuked, exhorted with all authority and long suffering? In a word, have I been all that a Methodist preacher ought to have been during the past year? I hardly know how to frame an answer to these interrogations.

I think I have tried to do my duty; and yet I fear I have not done my whole duty. If I have not, what will be the consequence? I cannot recall a single day, a single moment. The first nine months of the year 1872 are gone, forever gone, and all opportunities for improving time, talents, etc., are gone also.

By reference to my "pastor's pocket record" I find that I have preached fifty-six sermons, married four couple, attended five funerals, preached two funeral sermons, baptized fifteen children, baptized twenty adults, made one hundred and ninety-five pastoral visits, visited seventy-five families, obtained seven subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, collected and forwarded $42 for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and $4 for the Nashville Advocate, collected and forwarded $7.50 for the Sunday School Visitor, sold over one hundred dollars' worth of books, mostly Bibles and hymn books, collected for Conference purposes $24, and traveled over two thousand miles on horseback.

Look at it! A few lines tell it all! How little I have done. Certainly I can do better next year. I will try, if life is spared, to improve on the above in the future.

WHERE IS HEAVEN?

MR. EDITOR: Permit me briefly to reply to an article written by James Shanks, in the ADVOCATE of the seventeenth instant, in which he makes an elaborate effort to prove that the material sun is not heaven. As no one opposes his argument, he of course has the field to himself. He next says he will tell us positively where heaven is. He says it is somewhere in infinite space, but cannot tell where. "Next," he says, "we will notice Mr. Hester's faith, as written by himself and published to the world in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of September 26, where he says: 'I did not say the material sun is heaven, but did say that I believe that heaven is a material structure.'" Mr. Shanks admits in his article that the holy city was built of materials, but denies that it is a material structure. He says it must have been formed of immaterial substances. St. John says the city was pure gold, and the building of the wall of it was of jasper, and the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. Now is pure gold an immaterial substance? Was the earth immaterial substance before the fall of man? Was the body of Adam immaterial before he sinned?

Mr. Shanks says: "I oppose the idea of heaven being a material structure, because I believe it to be a relic of materialism." Does Mr. Shanks think that the Rev. John Wesley was a materialist? Let him read Wesley's sermon on the New Creation. Does he think that Rev. H. B. Bascom was a materialist? Let him read his sermon on Heaven. He will find that I am not alone in publishing the belief that heaven is a local material place.

Obituaries.

DIED, near Pineapple, Wilcox county, Alabama, October 7, 1872, of hemorrhagic fever, J. P. WILLIAMS, only son of R. Williams, aged thirty-four years and eight months.

The deceased was born and raised within a few miles of the place where he died, leaving a wife and two children and many friends to mourn his loss. Though we cannot say that he was a professor of religion, yet he was a man of a kind and benevolent spirit. Possessed of a sufficiency of this world's goods, he was kind to all, and never turned the needy away empty. Truly the poor have lost a friend. His father states to us that he has great reason to hope that James had given himself to his Savior, for he seemed to be impressed with the thought that his end was nigh some days before he was taken sick, and said that he was endeavoring to give himself to God. May God bless the bereaved wife and children and the aged father, and bring them to the land of rest, where parting is no more.

J. M. J.

DIED, near Livingston, Sumter county, Alabama, on Wednesday, October 9, 1872, Miss JULIETT T. DODSON, aged forty years, one month and fifteen days.

She was born in Madison county, Alabama, August 24, 1832, and was the youngest child of Rev. Elisha J. Dodson, who was for many years a member of the Tennessee Conference. After the death of her father she came with her mother to Livingston, where she was converted and joined the church in 1846. From that time until her death she was a consistent Christian. She had many excellent traits of character. The associations of her early life made her the friend of the liberal preachers, and she was given to show her friendship by many acts of kindness.

Her death was sudden and unexpected. At nine o'clock in the morning she was well and actively engaged in her household duties. Soon afterward she was taken with a congestive chill, and at eight o'clock in the evening she was dead. During these few hours her intense suffering prevented her speaking of her hopes of heaven. But we are consoled by the fact that while in life and health she prepared for death; and although it came unexpectedly, we believe that she was comforted by the "rod and staff" of God as she "passed through the valley of the shadow of death," and that she is now enjoying the reward of the faithful.

J. M. MASON, Her Pastor.

ROBERT HINES FEATHERSTON, son of Rev. F. M. and Mrs. Mary E. Featherston, was born in Doner, Yazoo county, Mississippi, February 25, 1861, and died, in Warren county, Mississippi, July 22, 1872, aged eleven years and nearly a half.

A cloud of sadness has settled over our rural home, and shut out the golden sunlight of joy. Our Robert has gone! Our family circle is broken, and there is left "a vacant chair." On the stone night our Robert came, the black-winged death-angel for the first time visited our household, and took from us sweet Marion. Since then the good angels have kept him away until lately; but again he has flapped his ghostly pinions over our sunny home, and invaded its angel-guarded precincts, bearing our Robert off. Robert's stay was short, but not useless to us. He was a good boy, and we loved him dearly. He came and staid long enough to bind our hearts with affection's vine-like tendrils firmly to him, and then went home, leaving us bound by one more tie to heaven. He has gone to join our seraph Marion in the skies. They never met on earth, but long ere this they have met in glory, and doubtless to-day wander together over the fields of bliss. They know each other there. Oh, the grandeur of that heaven-born intuition!

"The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." We bow with meek submission to his sovereign will; and, as we "pass under the rod," only murmur: "Thy will be done."

He sleeps in the first-ding grave at our new church—"Beechland"—where the mocking bird will sing requiems till he is waked by the thunder of time's funeral dirge. Till then, sweet be his rest. Perhaps ere then we all will have joined him and Marion on the banks of that crystal river that softly glides by the twelve-fruit Tree of Life.

H. WALTER F.

JOHN SAVORY KNOX was born in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, October 26, 1820, and died in the same parish, October 19, 1872, of inflammatory rheumatism.

Bro. Knox was reared by religious parents, and early in life connected himself with the Methodist Church, and lived a consistent Christian to his death. A large community of friends mourn his loss as a man of unblamable character and manifest prominence in all the affairs of interest pertaining to his church and country. He was always on the right side of every question, and never sought advantage except from principle. He was conscientious in the extreme—wronging himself before others. He had the highest regard for duty, whether for the church, his country or his family, and never failed in personal sacrifice when it was required. He was never the man to take the lead for popularity—he was content with the lowest seat; had a poor opinion of his own merits, and yet never failed in material support equal with the first. Too much cannot well be said of our departed brother's integrity and liberality, and of his acknowledged importance in the sphere in life which he filled. The large concourse of people who attended his funeral is the strongest expression of this. He was a most sympathizing husband and parent—he toiled unsparingly for the welfare of his family. Consistent in life, he was calm in death. His sickness was long and severe, but he never complained. His mind was strangely delirious during the most of his sickness, but as his end drew nigh his consciousness increased, and on the day of his death he sang the chorus:

"Home, sweet home," and remarked that he had a home "high up in heaven."

JOSEPH W. MEDLOCK.

SAMUEL N. MARTIN, the subject of this sketch, was born in Spartanburg district, South Carolina, October 20, 1792, and departed this life, at his residence in Jackson county, Mississippi, October 13, 1872, aged seventy-nine years, eleven months and twenty-three days, after an illness of about two months, during which time he was never heard to murmur or complain, but said he had long since made preparation for death. During his affliction he often said that he had great enjoyment. It was in the year 1817, in the town of Biloxi, Harrison county, Mississippi, that the writer made his acquaintance. In 1818 he was married to Miss P. A. F. Hester, with whom he lived happily until death summoned him to his final reward, leaving his wife and two children to mourn their irreparable loss. Bro. Martin was truly a Christian—decided, firm, unyielding, always abounding in the work of the Lord. As class-leader, Sabbath school superintendent and church steward he was ever at his post, unless providentially hindered. No doubt many have preceded him to the world of light, and many more are on the way, who received their first religious impressions under his superintendence at Sabbath school. As a husband and father he was kind, affable and affectionate. In his family devotions he was earnest and sincere, never failing to read, sing and offer devout prayer night and morning. He was truly a Christian at home. He loved the Methodist Church South, of which he was a faithful member. The ministers always found a welcome under his roof. He was just in all his dealings, often suffering loss rather than contend. He was patient in tribulation, never suffering from anticipation—always making the best of the time as it passed. Even during the late war, while all was excitement, he was calm and unmoved in his faith. In 1864 he professed to obtain the great blessing of sanctification, and ever after adorned his profession by an upright walk and godly conversation. The last public service he attended was at Moss Point, August 4, where he heard Bishop Keener preach. His last public prayer was offered at his family altar on the morning of August 13, when he prayed earnestly that they might be an unbroken family in heaven. So may it be.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1872.

A SHIPWRECK.

Steadily blows the northeast wind,
And the harbor flag blows straight from the mast;
And the sailors lounge and look on the pier,
And smoke their pipes, and think it will last.

Yonder the cloud-rack lowers and glooms,
And the sweet blue sky is hidden away;
Whilst the muttering waves grow hoarse and loud,
And you have to shout the thing that you say.

The distant fleet of white sailed ships
Come hastening landward with wet black sides,
As they lean to the push of the gusty wind,
Now a rush, now a pause, on the weltering tides.

The spumy froth of the rock-vexed waves
Gathers in creaming yeast on the sand;
Then away in fluttering flocks it speeds
For hedges and hillsides far inland.

The sea-birds dip and wheel in the air,
And search the surges with greedy eyes;
They hang with tremulous wings on the brink,
Then away on the blast with their shrill, sad cries.

Yonder the people crowd to the cliff,
Where the long gray grass is flattened and laid;
As the stress of the hurricane passes by,
Every eye to seaward is fixed intent.

Far down below are the cruel rocks,
All black and slippy with black seaweed;
And pits profound, where the whirlpools run,
Forever revolving with hideous speed,

How the ships come! Let them come, poor barks!
Here is the harbor quiet and still;
Once entered, the weary crew can sleep,
And dream of their home without fear of ill.

How the ships come! What's that? A helm
Is carried away, and she drifts to the blast;
Over her deck sweeps a roaring wave,
And up in the rigging the crew run fast.

On she comes for the rocks! O men!
O maids and mothers! O daughters and wives!
You are sitting at home by the hearth fire warm,
And the sea has a hold of your loved ones' lives!

Now she strikes on the rocks! No aid
Can reach her there; she must perish and fail,
This is but a great third wave will come,
And eat her up, and engulf the whole.

There—they are lashing themselves to the spars!
Spirit on the wind comes their bitter cry;
They are waving their hands! Out of the main
A billow rises and breaks, and goes by.

All is vanished; the ship and the men,
Crumbled and crushed, and hurled away!
Here are the splinters all over the rock,
All o'er the beach, and all round the bay.

There, on the sands, is a sailor's cap,
And there close by a man on his face;
And there are the others! Oh, cover them quick,
And carry them off from this fatal place!

They are laid in the yard of the weather-worn church,
And the grass will grow on their quiet grave;
But, O Lord in heaven, hadst thou spoke one word,
It had stilled the wind and curbed the wave!

But perhaps thou wert speaking. Our ears are dull,
And we cannot discern in this atmosphere;
The men, as they drowned, might have clearer sense—
Might have heard thee well, and seen thee near.

We all must be patient, and bear our part
In the petrel toil of a wreckful world;
But some day (having rest may be found at last,
When the anchors are flown, and the sails are furled.

Chambers' Journal.

JOHN WESLEY.

For some time, however, John Wesley appears before us as a kind of eighteenth century Puseyite, or rather such a one as Harrell Froude; his notions were cast in a mold of High Church idealism, not unmixed with a certain morbid pietism; and Oxford Methodism almost anticipates that other mighty reaction, the great religious movement of our age; but the Methodism of Oxford, indeed, although it numbered among its adherents such men as the Wesleys, and Whitefield, and Hervey, and Ingram, soon came to an end, and, but for Wesley's after career, would have been buried in oblivion, for Mr. Tyerman truly characterizes it as "misty, austere, gloomy and forbidding, while yet intensely earnest, sincere and self-denying."

It does not seem very easy to settle the precise etymology of the term Methodist, whether derived, as some have said, from an allusion in Juvenal to a celebrated quack physician, or whether, as Mr. Tyerman seems to think, first used in a pamphlet attacking Whitefield in the earlier years of his ministry, in which the author fetches up an old sentence from the pages of Chrysostom, who says: "To be a Methodist is to be beguiled." We ourselves happened once, in a parish church in Huntingdonshire, to be listening to a clergyman notorious alike by his private character and vehement intolerance, who was entertaining his audience on a week evening by a discourse from a text in Ephesians iv, 14: "Whereby they lie in wait to deceive." He said to his people: "Now you do not know Greek; I know Greek, and I am going to tell you what this text really says; it says: 'They lie in wait to make you Methodists.' The word used here is methodeian, that is really the word that is used, and that is really what Paul said: 'They lie in wait to make you Methodists.' A Methodist means a deceiver, one who deludes, cheats, beguiles." The Grecian scholar was a little at fault in his next allusion, for he proceeded to quote that other passage of the apostle, "We are not ignorant of his devices," and seemed to be under the impression that "device" was the same word as that on which he had expended his criticism. "Now," said he, "you may be ignorant because you do not know Greek, but 'we are not ignorant of his devices'—that is, of his methods, his deceivers, that is, his Methodists." It was a piece of the richest criticism we ever remember to have heard in any pulpit.

Wesley achieved his greatest victories in the open air. So astonishing were the results of these very simple and Christ-like ministrations that there was surely something of the supernatural in the man Wesley. It is part of the very nature of Christianity to believe that from time to time the church is invigorated by extraordinary impulses of divine life and grace, and singular effusions of the Holy Spirit; and to those who are able to reach at all the idea of supernatural causes in the Christian life it is not difficult to apprehend the reality of such impulses. There was surely much that was remarkable in Wesley; it is unquestionable that strange influences seemed to attend him. His words, it has been remarked, seemed to possess a mesmeric power; his proximity to the supernatural has often been made the subject of criticism.

The strength of a great and popular leader is especially shown in his power to infuse his own spirit into the minds of other men, thus constituting an organized band of kindred helpers. Never, surely, was there a man who more remarkably abides this test than Wesley, and he became the general of a remarkable order.

John Wesley very soon poured his animating spirit into other men, and the history of Jesuitism—that marvelous story of the conquest of the human mind—does not exhibit anything like so striking an array of heroic and glorious achievements. Rome would make much of such a history had she to recite it of herself. The names of those who surround Wesley as his fellow-laborers and helpers are, indeed, all of them humble men; no courtly or episcopal favor smiled upon him or them as they passed along. He had absolutely nothing, but the pure gospel, by the proclamation of which he sought to awaken human interest and to command attention; but soon there came a host, of whom it might be said: "There went with him a band of men whose hearts God had touched."

But Wesley's success! Wesley, as an orator, seems still more inconceivable. By all accounts Whitefield was seraphic. Wesley seldom rose beyond penetrating good sense, and nothing appears to have transported him out of his invariable calm. Yet the effects of his oratory were even still more wonderful; there was something of magnetism in it. Henry Moore, his great friend, says: "At this moment I well remember my first thought after hearing him preach nearly fifteen years ago; spiritual things are natural things to that man." In innumerable instances we find audiences shaken as by a mighty wind, hurled down, agonizing, screaming aloud; there was much more of all this in Wesley's preaching than in Whitefield's, yet in Whitefield's we should expect it more. Wesley, in the style of his oratory, seems to have been judicial, and our readers are not unaware of the remarkable power that quiet statement is able to exercise. Who so passionless apparently as Jonathan Edwards, a man who would have disdained every approach to sensationalism, whose entire mode of pulpit delivery was obnoxious to all ideas of pulpit oratory, and whose whole scheme of thought and expression were as calm and clear as logical metaphysics could make them? yet what scenes he witnessed when he preached! Thus it was eminently with Wesley; crowds thronged around him intent to listen wherever he appeared; if the face was beautiful, the height of the body was so far beneath the average standard that it seems almost contemptible for the holding of such powers as he wielded; and then the voice, not less than the manner, appears to have been unfitted to carry tempests of passion, nor did he desire that it should. We suppose that it must have been singularly clear and penetrating, and that every sentence was sharply cut and elaborated, not by preparation and the pen, but by convictions deep and indelible. Such sentences, carried upon a clear, penetrating voice—and in oratory the voice is all but everything—will achieve more than more plausible means. It is fervor which fires, but fervor often burns more effectually in the still, white, soundless heat than in what seems to be the most raging flame.—British Quarterly Review.

THE blossom cannot tell what becomes of its odor, and no man can tell what becomes of his influence and example, that roll away from him and go beyond his ken on their perilous mission.

CHANGES IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

The following extract from a letter received in Boston from Constantinople, dated October 16, and written by a very intelligent missionary, is published by the Boston Traveler:

"The streets are named, and doors are designated by numbers. Scavenger carts are supplanting the dogs. The terrible conflagrations which brought distress to thousands of the people, and left scenes of appalling desolation in their track, have been succeeded by broad avenues and handsome stone structures of European architecture, in place of tumble-down wooden edifices on streets so narrow that the sun could hardly ever peep into them. Spacious flag-stone sidewalks are seen now in a few localities, and instead of the bowlder-stone pavements, of horrible memory, macadamized roadbeds help one to surmount the long, steep ascents of Constantinople hills with much less of fatigue. Tramways are built and building—a boon of inexpressible value to the aged and feeble, and a thousand dwellings have been demolished for the track of the Belgrade and Vienna railroad, which comes in at the Seven Towers, and is carried along the Marmora around the Seraglio Point to its terminus on the Golden Horn. The demolition of much of the sea-wall, to make way for it, and furnish materials for embankments, is a suggestive symbol of the social and religious reconstruction which is tearing up old foundations, and using the labors of ages past for that which is to be. Not less significant are telegraph lines, running to all points of the compass; I counted, a few days ago, twelve wires neatly attached to their posts on one side of a street, and four on the other. The spectacle of small craft on the waters, sea-going steamers of the largest class, smaller passenger boats for the Bosphorus, Prince's Islands and ports on the Marmora, and the magnificent iron-clads and war vessels anchored in front of the Sultan's palaces, impresses both residents and strangers with a vivid sense of the greatness of wealth and power which, in spite of mismanagement, corruption and misrule, and all the elements of weakness and decline in the country, are here concentrated. Costumes are changing, and customs and ideas change with them. Even Turkish women, outwardly sheeted as ghosts, are said to have adopted Frank articles of dress beneath the external covering, and go about tottering on high-heeled shoes of latest Parisian style. Armenian women have long since discarded the yashmak, and appear in public with unveiled faces, and attired as ladies of Europe. Thirteen newspapers, three of them dailies, three tri-weeklies, and seven weeklies, one of which issues a daily bulletin, for Americans alone, at the capital, attest a new intellectual life, not only by the fact of their existence, but the freedom of their discussions."

THE DRESS OF CIVILIZED WOMEN.

I do declare that I think it would be better to die and get out of torment at once than to have to rise every morning, for some forty or fifty years, and box one's body up in a sort of compressive armor, hang weights to one's hips and more weights upon one's head—which last are supported by the roots of the hair; put one's feet into shoes a number too small, and not of the right shape, and with heels like stilts; and then set about doing the whole duty of women with a cheerful face and a spry air, for from fifteen to seventeen mortal hours out of the twenty-four! That there are so many women who are not frightened into a decline at such a prospect, and that they bravely undertake to do it—nay, more, that they even dream that under such disadvantages they can work side by side with unshackled man, and that they die in trying to do it—certainly says much for their courage, but very little for their common sense.

A man's dress, to a great extent, is fashioned for comfort. He has contrivances for suspending the weight of his clothing from his shoulders. If the east wind blows he can turn up his coat collar, button himself up snugly, slouch his hat over his eyes, thrust his hands into his pockets and brave the weather. But imagine a woman removing her hat or bonnet from the angle at which fashion says she must wear it on account of the weather, or turning any of her "fixtures" up to protect her neck and throat, or buttoning up anything that was unbuttoned before, or sticking her hands into her pockets! She would be taken for an improper character out on a mild spree, or for an escaped inmate of a lunatic asylum, should she endeavor by any impromptu arrangement of her habiliment to save her health.—Science of Health.

AN OPPONENT, speaking of Mirabeau, said: "That man would do anything for money—even a good action."

SCIENTIFIC.

M. DIAMILLA MULLER, who is engaged in researches on terrestrial magnetism, states that in the vicinity of certain rocks in the Adriatic sea the needle of the compass deviates from its true position to the extent of an angle of two degrees. This is not only a most remarkable scientific fact, but one of the greatest practical importance. By such a variation a steamer or vessel might readily be turned out of its course into real danger. Besides, what occurs in the Adriatic may occur elsewhere, and often constitute the occasion of shipwreck.

SIR WILLIAM W. GULL, F. R. S., recently said in an address to the London Clinical Society: "Respecting the object we work for—this living organism of ours—one great advance has of late been made. We are acquiring a physiological notion of disease. Disease is no entity; it is but a modification of health—a perverted physiological process; and this must at all times be insisted upon. Were it not that we fear death, and dislike pain, we should not look upon disease as anything abnormal in the life-process, but to be as part and parcel of it. Few would now venture on a definition of disease; for in reality it is but the course of nature in a living thing which is not in health. In health the balance of function is even; incline it to either side, and there is disease. That being so, just as the life-process constitutes an individual and puts him apart from his fellows, so must any alteration in it be individual, and not general. But to the ignorant disease is an entity—an evil spirit which attacks us and seizes us. Hence arises the word "seizure," which, though in a somewhat different way, we still use, but with a protest. To the charlatan disease is a set of symptoms to be attacked by a variety of drugs—a drug for each symptom. To us disease is a life-process of a perverted kind."

PROF. PALMIERI, who so bravely remained at the observatory on Mount Vesuvius during the eruption, for the purpose of scientific observation, lately gave an account of what he witnessed, in a lecture delivered at the Technic Institution at Naples. This observatory is a station high on the cone, for the shelter of watchmen who remain there to give alarm whenever there are indications of danger or during an eruption. Thus on the evening before the outbreak the mountain seemed "to sweat fire through every pore, which by night appeared like so many specks of flame; by day they were changed to smoke." His peril may be easily imagined from the fact that the lava again precipitated itself into the Fosso della Vetrana, flowing over the former beds, filling it now to the height of six hundred and fifty feet, and approaching to within a few feet beneath the observatory. Another addition will destroy the station. Here the lava has a breadth of three thousand two hundred and eighty feet. On the banks of this river of fire small craters were formed, which thundered like the principal crater, and ejected smoke, ashes and stones to the height of nearly three hundred feet. The chief source of lava was a new opening in the Atrio del Cavallo, from which, between two and three o'clock in the morning, a torrent broke forth with a fearful roar and great violence, yet calmly though rapidly flowing away, wrapped in a cloud of "boiling smoke." Meantime the chief cone gave out a continuous shower of ashes and fiery projectiles, which rose to the height of five thousand feet, the whole mountain "thundering terribly." Afterward came the heavy storms, which commonly do greater damage, occasioning great floods, that carry down ashes and pumice, and complete the ruin of lands and vineyards spared by the lava. Very strong electrical currents were established in the volcano, and unusually brilliant displays accompanied the ejections and storms. On all sides lightning flashed in the column of smoke and ashes which rose from the crater. Noises following these flashes varied from short explosions, full and round, to longer peals, often dry and hissing, like the noise of tearing paper. Already the crust of these streams of lava is firm, yet everywhere yielding jets of smoke from the "fumaroli"—vents communicating to the internal mass, still incandescent. Even the lava of 1858 is still smoking at several such holes. Around them are condensed sublimates of oxide of copper, chloric acid, sal ammoniac, sulphur, etc., which invest the surface of the lava with beautiful colors and forms. The popular belief that the ashes of the volcano are beneficial to land as fertilizers is in a great degree incorrect. To whatever extent they are immediately soluble in water they are exceedingly injurious; for analysis shows that they contain chloric acid, sulphuric acid and strong ammonia salts, which burn and wither vegetation. Silicates, which disintegrate slowly, may be useful to vegetation.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE whole number of scholars reported in the 418 Sunday schools on Manhattan Island is 115,826. The monthly average attendance of scholars is 74,441.

VIRGINIA reports about 500 white Baptist Sunday schools, with say 25,000 scholars; also about 150 colored Sunday schools, comprising some 7,000 scholars.

IT is declared in the Sunday School Journal that thirty-six publishing firms in this country employ $6,000,000 in the manufacture of Sunday school literature.

IN THE Sunday schools of the Armenian missions of the American Board in the Turkish empire there are now nearly nine thousand scholars. An illustrated Sunday school paper is published for their benefit.

THE various foreign missionary societies of Europe and America show in the aggregate nearly 300,000 pupils in their schools, all of whom may be counted as practically under Sunday school or Bible school instruction.

THE secular Tuesday evening lectures for men only, at St. Paul's cathedral, London, were resumed on October 29, and will continue every Tuesday evening till further notice. They will commence at eight o'clock. The first course of three lectures will be delivered by Canon Gregory on "The Bonds of Society—Past and Present."

IN A RECENT ADDRESS Father Gavazzi said: "There were now harmoniously at work in Italy three principal denominations, namely, the Free Christian Church of Italy, which was the largest of all; the Waldensian Church, and the Wesleyan Church. They had altogether 100 evangelical congregations, with an average of 30,000 constant hearers.

IN THE Episcopal dioceses of the thirteen Southern States the gain in ten years, ending with 1871, was from 39,000 to 56,000—a little more than 38 per cent. The greatest gain was in the State of Texas, from 700 to 2,000 communicants—nearly 300 per cent. The only loss was in South Carolina, of 1,524 out of 5,672 communicants, or nearly 36 per cent.

REV. AMBROSE F. DUSKILL, of the Church South, now in the fiftieth year of his ministry, forty-nine years ago was a missionary on the south side of the Tennessee river. Dr. McFerrin writes that he shows but few signs of old age. His hair is black, and his eyes have never grown dim; he has never used glasses, and now reads small print without difficulty.

FROM a census recently taken in Paris it appears that there are in that city 1,732,529 Catholics, 30,421 Jews, 17,281 Calvinists, 14,940 Lutherans, 9,482 Anglicans, Methodists and Quakers, 422 Mohammedans, Buddhists and Brahmins, and 2,500 who belong to no religious sect. The population is nearly 50,000 less than it was in 1866.

SPAIN has been the scene of other evangelical efforts besides those of the past two years, which have been attended with so great success. Christianity was early introduced, and under Constantine the country was completely Christianized. In 1517 the first Protestant church was established in Seville. It was organized by a young man, who suffered a martyr's death. Another youth was assassinated for forming a church in another city; and Rome still glories in the deed as having put to death a heretic. In 1670 there was not a single known Protestant in the land. Spain was scarcely thought of by the Reformed world. Her kings were hostile to true Christianity, and the Papal authorities watched every opportunity to keep away the truth of the gospel. During the entire history of the Inquisition, according to the estimate of Llorente, 31,912 were burned alive and 291,450 were subjected to rigorous pains and penalties. In 1837 English Christians sent George Barrow, who resided in Madrid, under the protection of the British consul, four years. During this sojourn he circulated 4,000 copies of the New Testament in Spanish, chiefly through the agency of the Gypsies. He was then compelled to leave. In 1861 the imprisonment of the family of the Matamoras attracted the notice of the Christian world. Signor Carrasco, the companion of Matamoras in persecution and imprisonment, was banished from Spain on account of his religion. During his banishment he resided in Geneva, and received the instruction of Dr. Merle d'Aubigne. As soon, however, as his native country was opened to the preaching of the gospel, by the revolution two years ago, he speedily and joyfully returned to preach Christ, the only Mediator, to his countrymen. His success has been so great that he has been obliged to ask for help in erecting a building large enough to accommodate the crowds that flock from all quarters to listen to his exposition of the word and way of life.

OVER three hundred years ago the Huguenots made an attempt to settle in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, as a Protestant colony, under the leadership of Villegagnon, and with the co-operation of Admiral Coligny. But the little band was overwhelmed with misfortunes. Its members were mobbed by Catholics before they left France; at Dieppe a large number of artisans, necessary to the success of the enterprise, deserted; the Portuguese Catholic settlers in Brazil made war on them as they reached the coast; and, worst of all, their leader proved to be only a political adventurer, who at length threw off all disguise and became their greatest persecutor. Numbers were put to death on trilling pretexts; many returned to France, in time to prevent the emigration of a large body of Flemish Christians and ten thousand more French Protestants, who were on the point of joining the colony. And thus a band of pilgrims who, like the company that left Delft Haven seventy years later, set out with the high purpose and hopes of laying the foundations of a great Protestant nation was destroyed, and Brazil became a Catholic instead of a Protestant country. To recover this wide domain to the Protestant faith has been undertaken by the American Bible Society and our Presbyterian Boards, and their efforts have been the only organized successful missions in the field. The first Protestant missionary of the Presbyterian Board, Rev. A. G. Simonton, went to Rio in 1859; and before his death, in 1867, established a flourishing mission. In these twelve years that have passed seven churches have been organized, whose aggregate membership is 350. A good beginning has been made, says the Presbyterian, toward training a native ministry; and a religious paper, the Imprensa Evangelica, the oldest religious journal in the empire and the only evangelical one, has been maintained almost from the first. Fourteen missionaries, five native teachers, and six colporteurs are employed. The chief stations are Rio de Janeiro, San Paulo, Bahia, Brotos and Hanna. Requests for books and tracts come in from districts where no missionary has ever penetrated, beyond the present ability to supply them. The demand for an increase of laborers is great, and the need one of extreme urgency; while all experience has shown that a richer harvest of souls is obtained here than in any other foreign field among the missions of the Presbyterian Church.

NATIONAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE BIBLE.—In the year 1866 the American Bible Society resolved "to undertake, without delay, a thirty general supply of the whole country with the word of God." Most of the work involved in this supply has been performed by the auxiliary societies which have been formed in every part of the land. In many cases the parent society has aided by liberal gifts, and by the labors of their agents. Pastors of churches, tract distributors, local-visitors and Young Men's Associations have co-operated in the great enterprise. In order to do the work thoroughly, as far as possible, every family in a district has been visited, not only to discover the destitute, but also to supply those who are able to purchase, and to obtain contributions from all in behalf of the general work. Where previous supplies have been thorough, the number of the destitute is relatively small, yet even in Broome county, New York, one family in every fourteen was found without the Bible. At the South the ratio was much larger. In the field of the Memphis and Shelby County Bible Society, out of 24,930 families visited, 8,243 were without God's word, or one in three. In Mississippi, out of 6,216 families, 2,763 were unsupplied, or one in two and a quarter. This work has been going on for six years, and more than three and a half millions of families have been visited, about one-tenth of whom, or 356,918, were without the Bible, and of these 270,266 were supplied by sale or gift. Besides these, 230,000 not included in families in the returns were supplied. Great as is the work that has been done, much more remains to be done. On this point the Bible Society Record says: "There are yet hundreds of thousands of families to be sought out and supplied with the Bible; to accomplish this of course involves expense. Paper, presswork, binding, and the other elements that determine the cost of a Bible in New York, constitute but one part of the expense of supplying the destitute. Boxing, cartage, freight, insurance, add a greater or less percentage to the prime cost. And then the work of looking up the needy, whether in solitary places or in cities, and of giving them judicious aid, involves an amount of travel and of service, to remunerate which with money would require oftentimes a larger sum than the value of the books donated and sold. Considerations of this character may well be pondered in connection with the inquiry how the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures may the best be promoted."

THE OBJECTIVE POINT.

Every individual life has ae its end the salvation of the soul. It is so in the mind of God, however it may be with ourselves. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to he conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren." The good which God contemplates above and heyond all other is the spiritnal and eternal. He "will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." The great plan of life in the order of Providence is to bring abont this result. Everything is subsidiary to this, and designed to work together for this end. The measnre of temporal good is snhordinate, and of comparatively little significance, except as it bears upon the higher purpose.

In the permission and appointment of affliction the effect lice in the same direction. What is best as to this world is not ont of the divine thonght, hnt is held in strict snhserviency to the greater good of eternal life. Our own views and purposes come in conflict with those of infinite wisdom. Whilst we are hent upon present objects pleasing and desirable, intent upon health, fortune and prosperity, the relation of these to holiness and ultimate salvation is perhaps not considered. The goal we have set before ns is very different from that which is embraced in the will and predestination of the Heavenly Father. Man, with his short-sightedness, earthly-mindedness and sensual appetites ie driving at the visible and perishable, whilst his Maker is endeavoring to mold and fashion him for eternal bliss. With unbelieving man the objective point ie earth; with God it is heaven. Hence the conflict between the creatnre and the Creator, owing to the difference in the objects. Perhaps the most of human lives, as men would shape and direct them, are at war with the goodness of God. He ie aiming at the one grand pnrpose of making saints of them, whilst they are chiefly intent on the achievement of temporal success.

It is the perception of the end which God always has in view which brings submission to the believing heart, and enables it confidently to declare: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." In the details of Providence, and in particular instances of suffering, there may be much that is inexplicable, but the adequate solution of all is found in the plan and purpose of God to save the soul. What is best for this ie the good, and what hinders it is the evil. No amount of present pleasure is good if it obstructs our path to the skies, and no form of temporal suffering is evil if it contributes to the final rescue of the soul from death. Paul rose to the plane of the divine estimate when he could talk of the wreck and anguish of this present time as not worthy "to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." The sufferings of threescore years and ten, the pain of body, anxiety of mind, poverty and worldly disgrace are "our light afflictions, which are hut for a moment." Such language would be the saddest and bitterest irony, and a most unseemly trifling with human sorrow, but for the import of a future and immortal destiny. The key hy which we reach the true interpretation is in this higher objective point toward which the grace and providence of God are ever moving.

When we take in the divine thought, and our faith rises to the hoight of the infinite honevolouce, we can then thankfully accept a lot of pain and sorrow as consistent with the tenderest aspects of mercy and love. Our ideas of a snccessful life and of the most desirable condition will he modified by this perception of an end which reaches far heyond the boundaries of time. Better be a Lazarns and reach the portals of glory, than to live in luxury and he consigned to the flames of perdition. No matter through what trials, or over what rough paths of trouble, so the soul, redeemed and pnrified, reaches the living crown. As many of us look out on the scenes of time the headlands of heaven are altogether below our little horizon, and our vision embraces only the nearer objects of desire and pnrsuit. God looks farther, and hardly regards the nearer objects at all, in the snrpassing importance of "the land that is very far off." To bring us there is his study and purpoee, through whatever of severe discipline and present disappointment; whilst we, in our blindness and unbelief, are kicking against the pricks, and sometimes frustrating the predostination of his all-embracing love and pity.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

Mr. Editor: I send you herewith the appointments of the Northwest Texas Conference. It met at Belton on the twenty-third ultimo, and adjourned on the twenty-eighth. Session pleasant. Good weather, large attendance, and an excellent spirit among the preachers. The old story of hard times and short crops abated our collections somewhat; but we hope for better things next time. Now that there are no slaves to buy and land can be held only to pay taxes, I am at a loss to conceive what people are doing and going to do with their money in these fruitful regions. In some places they are investing in schools and substantial stone churches—a hetter investment for attracting population than railways or insurance companies. I find that here, as all through the South, the itinerant preacher is doing more than any other citizen toward turning the waste into a fruitful field. He follows close upon the heels of the trapper, and waits to welcome the Western emigrant far out in the war-path of the Comanchee. He projects colleges and universities where not ten years since the wolf would steal meat from under a traveler's head. In this Conference I find some old Texans—men of gray hairs—who have breasted many a fierce northor and worn out a strong life in their encounter with exposure and privation, in whose souls etill glow their wonted fires, but who now can only aid the Master by their noble presence, prayers and faith. Young preachers are pouring in with the people who by rail and wagon are filling the vast champaign of rich black land which stretches from this point in boundless perspective on every side. The climate gives these prairies a decided advantage over those of Illinois, which they much resemble. I have now traveled over them in direct line from Belton a distance of one hundred and ten miles, and might go one hundred and ten miles farther in the same direction without any material change in the character of the soil. The railroad which pierces this region, coming down from Kansas, and just about being finished, will furnish coal at a cheap rate, and bring fuel within easy reach of everybody. Though in the cotton latitude, it is a capital wheat-growing section, and must presently contribute immensely to the wheat receipts of New Orleans and Galveston. But the feature of this landscape which most charms the eye is the absence of the negro. A few are to be seen—just enough to remind one of old times and South Carolina—but not enough to make a free government an impossibility. Unless there be some drawback not on the surface, I cannot see why this part of Texas should not speedily fill up with the best population in the world—that is, men who have been forced to leave their homes in Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia or the Carolinas by the excessive proportion of freedmen or the pressure of taxes in those States.

Six preachers were admitted on trial—W. G. Davenport, John R. Barden, Thomas Reece, William D. Robison, Joseph J. Shirley and Wiley V. Jones. Two were elected traveling deacons—James D. Shaw and W. A. King. Four were ordained traveling elders—Horace Bishop, Augustus A. Cornette, J. F. Hines and F. Olin Dannelly. Two have died during the year—Jesse M. Boyd and Guy C. McWilliams. The whole membership of the Conference is twelve thousand four hundred and seventy-five, which is a gain over last year of two thousand two hundred and thirty-two. The contribution for missions was only $1,500; for widows and orphans $800. The next Conference meets at Waco.

This morning I walked up to the college building, and found it in size about like Mansfield College, of Louisiana. There were present a goodly number of young gentlemen and young ladies—one hundred and forty-seven in all, about equally divided. The prospect is certainly very fine—all that the friends of the college could ask. Of this number there were some six licensed preachers, and some five or six more who are looking to the ministry. Rev. J. M. Pugh is the president. This town is about the size of New Iberia, situated upon a high rolling prairie, near a small stream, which has cut its way through the lime rock, and furnishes a sufficient supply of wood from its banks—an excellent site for an institution of learning, quite accessible by railroad, and healthy. I leave this point for Sulphur Springs.

Yours, etc., K.

Waxahachie, November 1, 1872.

PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

Below we give an extract from a letter written to the St. Louis Christian Advocate by Rev. Dr. Fitzgerald. How about that chaining and caning? We remember meeting Bishop Soule on his return from California, years ago, with a handsome saddle and a gold-headed cane. The saddle he was proud of, and the cane also, but the massive gold head was carefully concealed by a buckskin wrapper. Dr. Fitzgerald says:

The statistics show a net gain of fifty-seven members during the year. This, under the circumstances, is a gratifying result, and is one of the many indications that Southern Methodism is gaining stability and strength on the Pacific coast. The preachers and people composing the Pacific Conference were never before so perfectly united and so zealous as now. This conclusion, Mr. Editor, is not the result of "Conference enthusiasm," hut is based on actual contact with our people in almost all parts of the work.

The defection of two of our old preachers, one last year and another this, has brought out the fidelity of our people in the strongest light. Not a soul followed them. On the contrary, their going produced a spontaneous uprising of Southern Methodist spirit that surprised even the most hopeful among us. Yes, sir; Southern Methodists in California are as firm in their devotion to principle and as true to our church as you are in Missouri.

This session of our Conference abounded in pleasing incidents. Bishop McTyeire was eaned and Dr. Sargent was chained. They both bore their respective "dispensations" well. The chaining of Dr. Sargent took place on Friday. At the close of the examination of characters the Bishop called the doctor to the front, and said something like this:

"My dear brother, the other day you preached your semi-centennial sermon under the oaks at the Saratoga camp ground, in the beautiful Santa Clara valley. You have preached in England, in Ireland, in Canada, and in every State of the Union except Florida and Texas. Now your brethren of the Pacific Conference think it is time such a far-traveling itinerant were chained. They wish to give you some token of their love. Their luscious fruits won't keep, their beautiful flowers will fade, so they have brought you this chain of gold, the product of their own mountains, and in their name I present it to you."

Dr. Sargent's reply was very happy, and when he ended there were few dry eyes in the Conference room.

The caning of the Bishop took place just before reading out the appointments on the last evening of the session. The stick is of California wood, gold-mounted, with a setting of gold-bearing quartz. In this case Dr. Sargent made the presentation, at the request of the Conference. The Bishop was taken by surprise—so he said, and so he looked—but his peculiar wit sparkled richly in his reply to Dr. Sargent's graceful remarks.

The most affecting incident of the session took place at the close of Friday's session. This was a sweet and melting talk from Sister Kavanaugh, wife of the Bishop, who is on a visit to her daughter in California. I cannot describe this talk. Its modesty, its pathos, its words of comfort and wise advice to preachers' wives, were worthy of a mother in Israel. There was no resisting it. All were melted, from the Bishop in his chair to the loiterers by the door. A resolution of the Conference expressed in strong terms the veneration and affection of its members for Bishop Kavanaugh, and the pleasure the visit of Sister Kavanaugh gave them.

The missionary meeting was a success. The speakers were Moody, Hoss and your correspondent. Moody was sensible and earnest, Hoss was eloquent, and your correspondent "took up a collection" of $400 in gold. The missionary fire is burning afresh among us. We have "set our pace" to raise this year the largest amount of missionary money, according to membership, in the Southern Methodist connection. What Conference will take up the glove?

MISSIONARY PROSELYTING.

The New York Observer exposes this tendency in the most venerable of all the missionary societies. But why not proselyte abroad as well as at home? Our Anglican friends pretend to believe that they only are the church, and that there is no regular way of being saved except through ordinances administered by them. If we believed what they profess to believe we would do as they do. The Observer says:

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was organized in England in 1647, more than two hundred years ago. It received a charter from the King in 1701, and it has been engaged in missionary work ever since. In the early settlement of this country missionaries were sent to the colonists of the Eastern and Southern States, and also the Indians. John Wesley was sent as its first missionary to Georgia in 1735. It now has missions in all parts of the earth, but one of the objects named in its charter, "to provide for the ministrations of the Church of England in the British colonies," has not only been made too prominent, but has been carried beyond the limits of "the British colonies." It has become too much of a society for the propagation of the Church of England in distinction from and even in antagonism to the gospel. The gross interference of this society in sending to the Sandwich Islands Bishop Staley and a retinue of priests to propagate High Church principles, and by establishing a showy ritual to attempt to seduce the converts from the religious teachers who had been the instruments in their conversion, is fresh in the recollection of most of our readers. It is true this effort, continued at great expense for several years, was a signal and mortifying failure, and was given up in disgust by the Bishop and his coadjutors, but it has been recently resumed, another Bishop having been appointed to undertake the same discreditable work of proselytism.

Since the gospel has had such a signal triumph in the Island of Madagascar, where the converts are now numbered by thousands, and where the rulers of the land have become nursing fathers and mothers to the church, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has attempted the same kind of interference, hoping to draw away the converts to the Church of England, but it was met with an indignant protest on the part of intelligent clergymen and laymen in England, and was abandoned for the time, the clergyman who had been appointed Bishop refusing to accept the appointment.

This society is carrying out the same policy in other places. The mission of the Presbyterian Board, at Kolapoor, in India, having been signally blessed within the last few years, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel took occasion, through the Bishop of Bombay, in the temporary absence of the principal missionary, Rev. Mr. Wilder, to send its agents to this place to establish a mission with the English Ritual, and to buy off the native teachers of the Presbyterian Board by the offer of larger pay, when the vast territory of India, with its two hundred million people, presented a thousand points where missions could be established to much better advantage, if the object really was to propagate the gospel. Mr. Wilder repeatedly protested against this interference with his labors and with the souls which God had given him as the fruit of his labor, but all to no avail. In one of his letters to the Bishop of Bombay Mr. Wilder wrote:

"As Kolapoor is a small mofussil station, and there are still immense regions of the Mahratta country wholly unoccupied by missionaries of any society, we shall confidently rely on the Christian courtesy of the Bishop of Bombay to respect our long occupancy at Kolapoor."

This remonstrance not being heeded, Mr. Wilder again wrote:

"I am thankful also to be able to say that a reinforcement of young missionaries is about to join me. Knowing that we are to have such a reinforcement, you will doubtless feel that more good can be accomplished in hastening the evangelization of India by establishing your new mission in some other and unoccupied locality amidst the wide desolations still existing in that land.

"Recalling with sincere gratification the Christian intercourse and valued sympathy and friendship of the chaplains and missionaries of your church with whom it has been my pleasure to become acquainted in Western India during the past twenty-five years, and not doubting that they all share with me in the conviction that more good can be effected by missionaries of different societies working in separate fields, rather than by establishing different missions in one small city like Kolapoor, I beg to remain," etc.

THE CHIEF PLACE OF POWER.

A prominent Northern Methodist journal, in a recent issue, says editorially: "The pulpit is unquestionably the chief place of power to the pastor." The "leader" ends better than it begins. In the conclusion the opening proposition is virtually denied in the admission that the power and efficiency of the pulpit amounts to but little without laborious, spiritual pastoral work. The pulpit, when the gospel is truly and faithfully preached, is not only the chief place, but is the place of power, for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. But it may be safely questioned whether the gospel is or can be fully and faithfully preached only as it comes from the heart and lipe of a true pastor—real spiritual pastor. The one implies the other. The one is the machinery; the other the motive power. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, but the power of the gospel is in the pastoral office. The church wisely ordains that those who are called to the work of preaching shall assume solemnly and publicly the obligation "to visit from house to house, and diligently instruct the children." The proposition to become a pastor fully implies all that this vow contains; and the professed pastor who in any degree willfully neglects this duty is guilty of no small sin. He is untrue to his own solemn vows; he is recreant to the trust the church has reposed in him; he abridges his usefulness in the grandest enterprise of earth—the salvation of souls. No preacher meets the spirit and intent of his call who does not meet this particular call. It is not the object of this paper to enter into detail—to show the benefit arising to the pastor and the people; these are patent to all; but in a general way to remind my brethren of the fact that in the neglect of this special duty—"visiting from house to house, and diligently instructing the children"—we are guilty of no small sin. In no other way can we be qualified for usefulness; in no other way can we be prepared to preach—to preach in the spirit of the gospel. In this we are to distinguish between pastoral and merely social visiting. The one must be done, or we fail of our mission—the blood of souls be upon us. The other had better be left undone. With the worth of souls burdening the heart, no pastor can dwindle into the popular social caller. May God make us "pastors after his own heart!"

We regret not seeing Rev. E. D Pitts when he passed through New Orleans on his way to Texas. The people of Chappell Hill are fortunate in securing so able and experienced an educator. We understand that in his new position as president of Chappell Hill Female College Bro. Pitts will, in addition to other competent assistants, have the aid of his accomplished wife and daughter. Recently from Opelika, Alabama, where he had established a most enviable reputation as the principal of a flourishing institution, he enters upon his work in Texas with a ripe experience, and with the best of qualifications for the post to which he has been called. Bro. Pitts carries with him the most appreciative testimonials and the heartiest indorsement of his many friends in Alabama, and is followed by the regrets and best wishes of his brethren of the Alabama Conference. For ourselves we commend him to his new constituency, and wish him all the success that he can desire.

Retirement.—In the St. Louis Advocate of October 30 Rev. Thomas M. Finney announces his retirement from the editorship of that paper. We sincerely congratulate all editors when released from their posts, and so of Bro. Finney, regretting exceedingly, however, to part with him as one of our most able and most courteous journalists. Our good wishes follow him in his retirement. Dr. McAnally has been elected to succeed Bro. Finney. He is a veteran in this line, and will get into harness at once. We welcome him back to the editorial ranks.

Rev. C. W. Carter, Mansfield, Louisiana, writes us that his work is in pretty good condition, twenty new members received into the church, and that a new parsonage has been bought. These are both excellent items. We are glad to hear of the buying of a parsonage. Few things are more important to Methodism than good parsonages. Yes, good ones—pleasant and commodious homes for the preachers and their families; such homes as the best of the people themselves would be willing to live in.

Our Columns From the Work are freighted with the good news of many souls converted. One circuit—Winnsboro, Rev. J. M. McKee, pastor—reports nearly two hundred additions to the church. To us this department is most interesting and cheering. Judging from the reports received, our church was never more prosperous spiritually than at the present time.

Rev. C. W. Miller, of Kentucky, has become one of the editors of the Central Methodist, published at Catlettsburg, Kentucky. Mr. Miller is an able preacher and writer, and most widely known as a controversialist. He will be a strong accession to the Central Methodist, which is one of our best connectional papers.

The Presiding Elders of the Louisiana Conference are requested to forward the names of the lay members of the Conference from their respective districts to the editor of the Advocate. This is desirable in making provision for the entertainment of the Conference, which meets in New Orleans, January 8.

Up to this date the count of the vote of New Orleans has not been completed. We shall probably hear from Alaska before we know who compose our City Council. It is thought that the Liberal-Democratic ticket has generally carried the State.

Rev. I. Z. T. Morris, of Montgomery, Alabama, writes us that Dr. Wadsworth will be back on the twentieth of November, and that the repairs on his church will be completed by the first of January.

Brandon Station, Brandon District, Mississippi Conference.

Presiding elders will please send a list of lay delegates, so that homes may be provided for them. Preachers and lay members will report at the Methodist Episcopal church on arrival, so that they may be assigned to their homes.

George F. Thompson.

CHANCE FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—Paper Sent Till 1874 for $2.—Persons subscribing for the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at any time from the first of November, 1872, to the first of January, 1873, will have the paper sent to them till the first of January, 1874.

EXTENT OF CIRCULATION.—The New Orleans Daily Times claims that its circulation is "OVER DOUBLE that of any other journal in the South." If the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be regarded as one of the "journals in the South," the Times is misinformed. Our opportunities for obtaining accurate information are equal to those of the publishers of the Times. Their circulation cannot be more than their issue. Their regular issue falls to between two and three thousand below the circulation of the ADVOCATE, according to our information.

CAUTION.—Remittances should always be accompanied with instructions how to apply them. A brother sends money to Robert J. Harp, agent. It is placed to his credit on book account. The ADVOCATE book-keeper never saw it except in the list of acknowledgments, and sends him the customary monthly statement, showing a balance against him. He writes, sarcastically perhaps: "Remitted at such and such dates." We refer to files of letters and find it even so, but that he had accounts with Book Concern and also with ADVOCATE, and did not say on which one of them it should be credited. The amount due on one side of the house stood to his credit; on the other the discrepancy resulted from his neglecting to say "for Advocate." By giving us specific instructions our correspondents will save us much trouble.

HAMS AND BACON.—Next to bread, pork in its various forms may be called the staff of life. Mr. S. B. Churchill, No. 40 Magazine street, has on hand a large supply, including sugar-cured hams at twelve and a half cents, green shoulders at eight cents, and smoked shoulders at eight cents per pound. He has also one hundred barrels of good family flour at $8 per barrel. no7 4t

COAL.—Messrs. Shelby Seymour & Co., 57 Carondelet street, advertise in this issue Pittsburg and anthracite coal, wholesale and retail.

ALL IN WANT of crockery, China and glassware and house-furnishing articles are invited to examine the stock of Navra & Offner, 174 Canal street.

CLARKE & WASSON'S Combined Interest, Average Time and Maturity Tables, just published and ready for delivery by Wasson & Nelson, stationers, 171 Gravier street.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—We direct the attention of our readers to the advertisement of B. J. West, whose large assortment of agricultural implements, plantation hardware and machinery will be found at 115 and 117 Magazine street.

LOUISIANA PAPER MANUFACTURING CO. The laudable endeavor of the Louisiana paper mills to build up a home establishment is deserving of encouragement. They have an office at No. 150 Common street, where orders for paper will be received. See advertisement in another column.

CHARLES BALLEJO, GROCER.—At 535, 537 and 539 St. Charles street, corner of Jackson, is situated the establishment of Charles Ballejo, grocer. The location of this store, removed from the centers of trade, markets, etc., will be found of great convenience by his patrons. He keeps a complete stock of goods in his line.

DOLHEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—This long-established and well-known Institution has entered upon another session of its prosperous career with renewed encouragement. It is now located at Nos. 164 and 166 Canal street, where ample accommodations and convenient arrangements are provided for a large patronage.

IT IS WITH PLEASURE we call attention to the card of Dr. Godfrey elsewhere, located at No. 183 Canal street, where he has practiced his profession for several years. We know of no one more worthy of the high reputation which he enjoys as a scientific and skillful dentist than Dr. Godfrey. Those who intrust the treatment of their teeth to him will, we are sure, not have cause to regret it.

THOSE who are suffering from coughs, colds or asthma may find relief by using Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm, a preparation which is made by one of the most experienced druggists in the city. It is not unpleasant to the taste, and we are assured it may be taken by persons of the most delicate constitution. It can be had of the proprietor, Dr. B. Laplace, Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, or at any well-assorted drug store.

BEAUTIFUL SCALES.—Those in need of scales will not find in the Southwest a more handsome display than at the popular agency of the Fairbanks scales, at No. 53 Camp street, under charge of the enterprising agent, Mr. Bowman. A specimen of these scales may be seen at the grocery establishment of Messrs. Clark & Meader, on Carondelet street, elegantly finished, the woodwork of which is varnished oak, with silver beam and silver-mounted weights. It is highly creditable to the manufacturers.

October 31, 1872, by the Rev. D. M. Hudson, Rev. D. J. WRIGHT, of the Alabama Conference, to Miss SALLIE HALL, of Snow Hill, Wilcox county, Alabama.

In the Methodist church, Montgomery, Alabama, November 6, by Rev. I. Z. T. Morris, Mr. PHILIP MILLEN, of Athens, Alabama, to Miss LIZZIE J. SNIPES, of Montgomery, Alabama.

At the residence of Mr. John W. Doyal, in Lake Prairie, on the evening of the fourth of November, 1872, by the Rev. A. W. Moore, Mr. JESSE S. MOORE, of Franklin parish, and Mrs. CATHRAINE E. HEAD, of Caldwell parish, Louisiana.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Correct the Stomach.—It is a well ascertained physiological fact that the origin of most of the ills that afflict humanity is a deranged condition of the alimentary canal. The bowels become constipated and sluggish, and thence arises a train of painful and distressing maladies. As a preventive and cure there is no remedy so safe and sure as Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

WEST POINT, GA., Sept. 3, 1871.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: I have been an invalid for five years, and have with fortitude and patience tried nearly every patent medicine known to the people without any effectual relief. It was suggested by some of my friends to take your Vegetable Pills, for which I am under obligations for said suggestion. It being a favorable one, I propose to state the effects. I weigh more than I ever did, and my health is far better than it has been in five years. I certainly give all the credit to your Pills; and as soon as there is an increase in the family, you may bet if it is a male that his name shall be Tutt. Publish if you choose.

The Child's Corner.

FOUR YEARS OLD.

I am four years old to-day;
Just as big as I can be;
Tom is coming here to play—
Tom and Joe and Jimmy Lee.

Mamma baked a cake so tall!
See! the top is white as snow.
What if I should eat it all?
Tell me, would it make me grow?

We shall have a lot of fun—
Tom and Joe and Jim and me;
We'll be horses, and we'll run
Just like fury—whoa! haw! gee!

Come in boys; don't be afraid;
I am four years old, you know.
See my cake, that mamma made!
Look! it's just as white as snow.

Fanny, reach me down my cup;
Find my hoe—we want to dig.
Baby sits in mamma's lap—
She can't hold me, I'm so big!

Stay and help us harness, please;
Get a string that's good to hold;
Come out doors, now, we shan't freeze;
We're big boys—we're four years old!

The Little Red Geranium.

In a little garden stood a number of flower-pots, just brought from the house, where they had been kept during the winter. In the pots lived geraniums, fuchsias, roses and many other plants. They brighten up on coming into the fresh air, just as children do; so as soon as they were placed on the grass-plot they commenced chattering.

"What a pretty ceiling," said a pink geranium which was looking right up at the sky. "The one we used to have was a dingy white, and was cracked in places. Once I heard the people saying that perhaps it might come down. I wonder if this ever will."

"To be sure," said a fuchsia, three or four years old—the geranium was very young—"you'll hear it coming by and by; but don't be afraid, it won't hurt you much. I always used to feel better after it came down, although it did sometimes break off my blossoms."

"Oh!" says the little pink geranium—she was proud of her blossoms—"I have taken so much pains to paint my buds that I know I should cry if any of them were broken off."

"Ah!" says the fuchsia, "my young friend, you must get used to troubles. Don't you remember how sad you were when Miss Emily cut off a bunch of your blossoms last winter? But next day, when you heard the family talking about how beautifully that pink geranium looked in Miss Emily's hair at the Christmas party, you were ready to jump for joy. I have sent blossoms to parties. I know how one feels."

"Yes, I remember," says the little geranium, "but do you think any one would admire a little blossom that was beaten off by falling wall, and thrown on the dirty earth!"

"Oh! how little you do know," says the old fuchsia. "It is rain that comes down, and not falling wall. You see the white specks in the blue over your head. Well, they drop to pieces; I've heard people call them clouds; what comes down to us is called rain. Sometimes it comes very softly—just washes the dirt off our leaves, and goes to our roots; but sometimes it falls down in big pieces, and something else, called the wind, comes and shakes us until we think we are going to be killed. Some sweet little mignonette, which stood by my side last year, was killed by the rain and the wind. Miss Emily felt very badly about it, for it had been given her by a friend only a short time before."

Close by the pink geranium and the tall fuchsia stood a little red geranium. It heard all, but said nothing.

The house-plants basked there in the sunshine for several days. Then the clouds grew thick and dark over their heads, and in a little while the rain began to fall and the wind to blow. The little pink geranium's blossoms were scattered hither and thither, the top of the tall fuchsia was broken off, and the little red geranium, which had heard all and had said nothing, was beaten to the ground, and its stem almost entirely severed. It just held on to its roots by a shred.

When the storm had passed and the plants had had time to take a long breath, and to see what the rain and wind had done to them, there was much sorrowing. The little pink geranium did cry over its lost blossoms, and the tall fuchsia mourned over its spire, broken off and carried away by the wind.

But the poor little red geranium was half dead. Its leaves were down in the mud, and the little shred by which it held to its roots was so small that only a little food could reach it from the ground. A great many times it almost lost heart and concluded there was no use in trying to live. But it was really a very courageous little plant, and it used well all the strength it had. It sent down new roots into the ground, and so got for itself more ample meals, but it could not raise its head from the ground.

Miss Emily, after awhile, took the other plants out of the pots and placed them in the garden border. She looked carelessly at the little red geranium and said that it was dead.

But the little thing was not dead. Deserted by all its flower companions, pronounced good-for-nothing by its mistress, it still lived on. And it had its reward, for late in the summer Miss Emily came to the pot to empty it of the supposed dead geranium, and to put a living plant in its place. She was so pleased when she found the poor mutilated flower yet alive that she lifted up its head, washed the dirt off its leaves, and pressed the earth firmly about its broken stem.

In a little while it was a hardy, beautiful plant, and when visitors came into the garden, and Miss Emily drew their attention to her favorite flowers, she would often point to it and tell of its struggle for life.

I wonder, children, if we cannot learn a lesson from this passage in the life of a few flowers. God teaches us by all natural things—by flowers and trees, by stones, by running brooks, by the sky over our heads and by the birds which fill the air with music. I think when he lets a little plant be beaten down until it is almost dead, but still inclines it to cling to life, and in due time sends a friendly hand to raise its [illegible] when troubles assail us from many of our sources of life and joy, we are not to be utterly discouraged, but to make use of what is left, waiting for the help that will surely come.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him who is the health of my countenance and my God."—E. C. S., in New York Observer.

The Baby that Lives in a Box.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

There are a good many funny things going on in the sea.

Wouldn't you like to go down there, and spend a day watching the wonderful creatures that live there? If you didn't have to breathe you might do it with ease.

One queer little fellow, whose home is in the bottom of the sea, lives in a cunning little box about as big as an egg-shell. He is called the Sea urchin, and there are several curious things about him. In the first place, he always lives in one house—the first of May is nothing to him. When he is a baby, about as big as a pen, the house is just big enough for him, and when he grows as big as an egg, the same house has to do for him.

Of course it has to be made bigger, and it isn't done, as we make our houses larger, by adding wings, building a story higher, or an addition behind. He just goes to work and enlarges his house all over. Although it looks like a box, and seems to be made of one piece, like an egg-shell, it is in fact made of six hundred pieces, fitting so nicely together that one can scarcely see where they join. This curious little sea-urchin finds lime in the sea water, and he takes it and enlarges his house at every joint, evenly and regularly, so that it is always exactly the right size for him.

When he walks about he has to take his house with him. Aren't you glad you don't have to carry your house about everywhere you go? If you did, you'd want it just to fit you, as the urchin's house fits him.

In the bottom of his box there are hundreds of little holes, through which he sticks hundreds of tiny feet, and walks about quite comfortably.

His back is covered with green and purple things like bristles, called spines. And tucked away somewhere, among his hundreds of feet, he has a mouth, a very hungry one too, and when he comes across a little fish or crab his busy little feet seize it and cram it into his mouth.

Another odd little creature that lives at the bottom of the sea is called a "currant squirter."

Perhaps you think that is a funny name, but it isn't a bit funnier than the fellow itself. In the first place, the whole family live on an old shell, or some such thing, and never think of leaving it. A nice quiet family they are, and very pretty for an aquarium, for they look exactly like drops of clear scarlet jelly.

They get their name from a very curious fancy they have for "squirting." In fact, it seems to be the only amusement the poor things have.

The largest one on the shell is generally about as large as a cherry cut in half, flat side down, and she is the mother of the group. The baby of the family is the size of a pin's head, round and red, and pretty as its mamma. The rest of the family are all sizes between the two. But I must tell you about the "squirting."

To begin with, she draws the sea water into her mouth—which is in a funny place, on top of her head. The sea water is full of tiny atoms of creatures, suitable to eat, and when the squirter has taken all the food from the water, she squirts it out again, making a very droll little fountain of herself.

She likes squirting so well that she even throws off her babies in the same way. Comical little dots of jelly drops they are, too. They go up quite high, and where they fall they settle for life. This is their first and last journey. After that they proceed to grow and squirt for the rest of their days.—Christian Weekly.

The Worst of the Lot.

In the early part of the reign of Louis the Sixteenth a German prince traveling through France visited the arsenal at Toulon, where the galleys were kept. The commandant, as a compliment to his rank, said he was welcome to set free any one galley slave whom he should choose to select.

The prince, willing to make the best use of the privilege, spoke to many of them in succession, inquiring why they were condemned to the galleys. Injustice, oppression, false accusations were assigned by one after another as the causes of their being there. In fact, they were all injured and ill-treated persons.

At last he came to one who, when asked the same question, answered to this effect: "Your highness, I have no reason to complain; I have been a very wicked, desperate wretch. I have deserved to be broken alive on the wheel. I account it a great mercy that I am here." The prince fixed his eyes upon him and said: "You wicked wretch! It is a pity you should be placed among so many honest men; by your own confession you are bad enough to corrupt them all; but you shall not stay with them another day." Then, turning to the officer, he said: "This is the man, sir, whom I wish to be released."

Was not this a wise decision? Must not all who hear the story allow that the man who was sensible of his guilt, and so submissive to his punishment, was, in all probability, the most worthy of pardon, and the most likely not to abuse it?

Sense of sin is the first step toward forgiveness. There is hope of a man who confesses his guilt, and feels that punishment is his desert. And the deeper the conviction of sin the more hopeful often is the condition.

The Farm and Garden.

The Bee-Moth.

Apiculture in bee culture seems to be taking a new start in the Southern States, and we are certainly pleased to note the fact, for we have long looked upon it as cutting no small figure among our many neglected resources. There is no reason in the world why we of the South should not raise bees and make the business a profitable one. They do it at the far North and East, and in our climate, and our great abundance of the natural food adapted to the wants of the insect, we undoubtedly have many advantages over those sections. In fact, so far as we know, there is but one drawback to bee culture here, and that is now to be looked for on every part of the American continent; we allude to the notorious bee-moth. And to say a few words in reference to it is the object which actuated the undertaking of this article.

The bee moth, scientifically known as Galleria cereana, is too well understood by all who have had much to do with bees to call for a lengthy description; but as the new interest already mentioned is leading many novices into the business, a short mention will hardly be considered time lost. The worm which works in the honey and does all the mischief is, when full grown, about one inch in length, of an ashy-gray color above, and yellowish-white beneath. The insect which produces it is a small, dusky moth or miller, bespangled and dotted about the wings with purple, or rather purplish brown. When its wings are fully expanded it would about reach across a silver quarter of a dollar—some specimens a little more and some a little less; the males are somewhat smaller than the females.

There are two broods of this insect each year, the first appearing in the latitude of Mobile early in April, and the second during July and August, and possibly, in some cases, as late as September. The moth is a night-flyer, though it comes out quite early in the evening—often before sundown, when the weather is cloudy and damp. Throughout the day it rests quietly in a place of concealment, generally in the neighborhood of the hive—a little careful looking will often detect it, comfortably ensconced in some angle of the bench or "gum." When the time for it to take wing has arrived, the female makes at once for the entrance of the gum or hive, passes in undisturbed, as the bees have retired for the evening, and deposits her eggs, usually just at the lower edge of the comb. These, in a short time, hatch minute whitish worms, which immediately fall to spinning a silken tube for protection. As they grow the tube enlarges, and becomes rough with the excrement of the insect, which, sticking about over it, looks not unlike grains of coarse gunpowder. Thus protected from any harm which the bees might desire to inflict, it cuts right through the comb and wax, destroying young bees and everything else which happens to come in the way of its channel. After a certain time it has attained to full growth, when it creeps into a corner of the hive, or to some place about the bench which would seem to afford a protection, forms a tough, whitish cocoon, changes into a chrysalis, and finally comes forth a perfect moth, as already described.

A worm-infested hive may generally be known by the discouraged aspect of the bees, and by an abundance of comb-cuttings, intermingled with black grains, like powder, lying on the bench, beneath the hive. The comb-cuttings of themselves could not always be taken as positive evidence, but when the black grains are present there is no room for doubt.

So far as we have any knowledge, there is no certain remedy for this pest. A great deal has been said about moth-proof hives, but we do not think such a contrivance has ever yet been made. True, some hives may have advantages over others, in being unfavorable to the work of the miller, but certainly none are entirely proof. And it is easy to understand why. The miller flies and can go any place where a bee can go, and it often quits its dismal hiding place before the bees have done coming in; hence how would it be possible to keep it out? But even were such a thing possible—were the bees all got in and gauze shutters closed over the entrances, it would still deposit its eggs beneath the side of the hive, or in some crevice outside, and the active little worms, not so large as the finest cambric needle, would, so soon as out of the shell, take up their line of march for the interior.

In case where a hive is found to be badly infested, the best course is to change the bees into another. One might lose them in the operation, but that would be no worse than one would be sure to do were he to leave them alone. Movable glass-set drawers are good, for these can be taken out and the worms destroyed when they are seen working in them. A great deal may be accomplished by looking up and dispatching the millers about the hives in the day-time; and setting the hive upon small blocks, if it is the ordinary "gum," and stuffing a rag underneath it on all sides, except that where the bees enter, makes a most excellent trap for such insects as have run their course above and come down to undergo their transformations. The rags will afford such a cozy retreat that they will never think of passing it, but will spin their cocoons in some of the folds, without fail, and when you open it out in the morning you will find them and have the pleasure of doing at least something toward reducing the size of the next generation.—Rural Alabamian.

CHICKEN CHOLERA.—Mr. Benjamin Sheppard, of Cumberland county, New Jersey, says he has had great success in checking chicken cholera by administering a strong decoction of black oak bark. It was given to the fowls by moistening their feed with it and restraining them from other diet. We presume it acted as an astringent. This is a very simple remedy, and is well worth trying.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College	$60 00
Tuition, per session of forty-weeks, in Preparatory Department	40 00
Contingent expenses	5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.
ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

Whitworth Female College,
AT BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

THE CONTINUED SUCCESS OF THIS INstitution is one of the best evidences of its merit. During the past term there were in attendance two hundred and twenty-nine pupils.

The members of the Faculty—eleven in number—are selected on account of their ability to teach.

Prof. ECKHARDT, Music Director, has few equals.

Madame JULIUS, a Parisian lady, of eighteen years' successful experience as a teacher, has been engaged to take charge of the French and Ornamental Department.

The very best care is taken of our pupils, both as to health and manners. Fires are provided for all.

No extravagance in dress is allowed.

The good health of Brookhaven is proverbial. Pupils from the miasmatic regions of Louisiana and Mississippi find this as healthful a school as can be found anywhere.

The charges are believed to be lower than in any school in the Southwest where similar advantages are afforded. Only from $230 to $265 for all expenses, excepting music, French and the ornamental branches.

No expense is spared in purchasing the most approved apparatus, maps, charts, etc., and all necessary school furniture.

Brookhaven is located on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, 128 miles from the city.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by forcing, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern the facts of history and science—and which should present only such as are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

THIRD EDITION.

GOD WITH US,

Or the Person and Work of Christ, with an Examination of the "Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr. Bushnell. "By Alvah Hovey, D. D., president of Newton Theological Seminary. 12mo, cloth, $1 50.

CONTENTS.—Part I. The Person of Christ. The Deity of Christ. The Humanity of Christ. The Unity of Christ.

Part II. The Atonement as Related to God. The Atonement as Related to Man.

Part III. "The Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr Bushnell. The Fundamental Principles of the Work. The Interpretation of the Language of Scripture, etc.

A thorough, interesting and very timely work.

Dr. W. H. Williams, of New York, writes to the publishers:

"I have read carefully throughout the work of Dr. Hovey, 'God With Us.' It seems to me a clear, succinct, and admirably cogent book; well timed, and not easily answered."

Dr. Caldwell, of Providence, Rhode Island, writes:

"I have just been reading Dr. Hovey's 'God With Us,' and with the greatest interest. The treatment of the subject is very fair, just, clear, and will relieve many minds obscured by speculations on the subject. The style is remarkably vivid and animated for a theological treatise. It is the best of Dr. Hovey's works."

A CHOICE BOOK. SECOND EDITION.

IN CHRIST,

Or the Believer's Union with his Lord. By Rev. A. J. Gordon, pastor of the Clarendon Street Church, Boston. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"A volume full of the "seeds of things," fresh, vigorous and instructive. To those "looking unto Jesus" this volume will be intensely interesting, and prove refreshing as "water to a thirsty soul."

The Sunday Courier says: "This book comes well up to its divine theme. We do not remember, since Thomas a'Kempis, a book so thoroughly imbued with great personal love of Christ, and such longing desire to bring men into like love of our Lord and Master as this. * * * This book has, beside its spiritual beauty, great literary merit. It is written in that full, rich old style which once was common among good divines, but now is unhappily so rare anywhere."

The Boston Globe says: "It is really a book of 'vital' religion, and which is at the same time 'sound' in doctrine. We make the distinction, because doctrinal soundness is often accompanied with spiritual dryness. Mr. Gordon is all alive. He is intensely 'orthodox,' but he is also intensely human. As a writer he is both fervid and polished."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

Our accounts from the country present no new feature, excepting some damage to cane from the recent gale. Picking appears to have been completed in several localities, and in others must have been suspended by the weather. The general tenor of the reports is encouraging for a larger yield than was anticipated a short time since, the popular estimates now ranging from 3,300,000 bales up to 3,500,000. From some points, however, the results have not been up to previous expectations, and the neighboring planters and merchants contend that the prevailing estimates are excessive.

The river is 14 feet 1 inch below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	12,273
Lake.....	50
Tennessee.....	2,046
Mobile.....	1,701
Florida.....	9
Texas.....	381
Total.....	16,460

On Saturday the market opened with light offerings and a fair inquiry, which being mostly for low middling and the better qualities, those descriptions commanded steady and in some cases fuller prices, while good ordinary was neglected and easier; and although the supply was subsequently increased by opening additional samples, yet the business for the rest of the day presented but little variation, and closed at a decline of ⅛c. in good ordinary, but no change in other grades. The sales embraced 5,500 bales. On Monday the demand was still more active, and, under high rates for foreign exchange and the competition among buyers, while the New York and Liverpool markets ruled still lower, 7,600 bales changed hands at prices showing no variation in good ordinary, but an advance of ⅛c. in other grades. On Tuesday the demand was active, and, although the movement was checked by moderate supplies, especially of the kinds in request, yet the sales summed up 5,500 bales, partly at previous rates, but to a large extent at a further advance of ⅛c. in all grades above good ordinary. Some authorities quoted good ordinary at 17@17¼c., and strict at 17⅜@17½c., but the weight of evidence was in favor of our extremes of 17⅛@17½c.; low middling sold at 17⅜@17⅞c., mostly at the latter, strict do. at 18⅛@18¼c., some high style commanding 18⅜c., middling at 18½@18⅝c., strict middling to good middling at 19¼@19⅜c., and good middling at 19½c., with one sale as low as 19¼c. There was a good deal of competition among buyers, especially for the better qualities.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 222,529 bales, against 146,012 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 216,417 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 9,330 to Great Britain, of 45,589 to France, and of 34,260 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary.....	16 @ —
Good ordinary.....	17¼ @ 17½
Low middling.....	17⅞ @ 18¼
Middling.....	18¼ @ 18⅜
Strict middling.....	18⅜ @ 19

SUGAR.—On Tuesday some 640 bhds. were received and mostly sold, but at lower rates. Inferior 7¾c., common 8c., low fair 8¼@8½c., good fair 8¾@9⅛c., fully fair 9¼c., fully fair to prime 9⅜@9¾c., strictly prime 10c., seconds 9@9½c., yellow clarified 10⅝c. ℔ lb., the market ruling with a further downward tendency at the close.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the receipts embraced 1,340 bbls. and 109 half bbls., which were mostly sold at 35c. for common, 36@43c. for centrifugal, 45@48c. for good, 50c. for prime, 52@53c. for strictly prime, and 54@55c. for choice.

CORN.—On Tuesday the demand was limited, and prices for white were easier; 1,500 sacks were sold, in lots, at 66c. for mixed, 67c. for yellow, and 69@70c. ℔ bushel for white.

OATS.—On Tuesday, though the demand was moderate, prices advanced 2c., and 500 sacks were sold, in lots, at 43c. for prime, and 45c. ℔ bushel for choice.

BRAN.—The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 800 sacks, in lots, at $1.07½@1.10 ℔ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 400 bags were sold, in lots, at $1.07½ ℔ 100 lbs.

PORK.—The market is bare of supplies. On Saturday 25 bbls. mess sold, to arrive, at $20.50 ℔ bbl., and some 300 bbls. were offering to arrive from New York.

BACON.—On Tuesday shoulders were quoted at 6½@6¾c., clear rib sides 11½@11¾c., clear sides 12¼@12¾c. ℔ lb. Some job sales were made by dealers at 12¾c. for clear sides, 5 casks clear sides sold at 12¼c., and 40 boxes shoulders at 6¼c. ℔ lb.

HAMS.—The favorite brands of choice sugar-cured are scarce, and command 20c. ℔ lb., while the ordinary brands are dull at 18½@19½c. ℔ lb. On Saturday 10 tierces new sugar-cured sold at 19c. ℔ lb., and on Monday 20 tierces plain canvased sold on private terms.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market is dull and prices are lower.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113⅝@114 (against 113⅝ at New York,) and closed at 113⅝@114½ (against 113⅝ at New York.)

In silver we have noticed only retail sales, the supply being too light to admit of any movement. American half dollars are now quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars nominal.

Soule's Commercial College,

CORNER OF CAMP AND COMMON STS., (STORY BUILDING,) NEW ORLEANS.

The Commercial Atheneum of the South.

Founded in 1856.....Chartered in 1861.

This is a full-course BUSINESS COLLEGE, complete in all its departments. It is conducted by progressive minds, and as the daily cycles of time roll by the increased wisdom, the improvements and the superior facilities of the age are combined and used to meet the demands of the rising business generation and advance the interests of its patrons.

It is located in the Athens of the great Southwest, and is emphatically the Commercial Atheneum of the South.

It possesses a commercial library, numerous counting rooms and lecture halls, and a proficient and well-appointed faculty. Stores and banks are connected, business regularly transacted, daily lectures given, and all branches practically, scientifically and philosophically taught.

The curriculum of studies is specially arranged to meet the wants of the planter, mechanic and professional man, as well as the merchant and banker. All branches of a thorough English education are taught, and also the higher mathematics, the French, Spanish and German languages.

Ninety-one premiums, gold and silver medals, diplomas, money prizes, silver plate, etc., attest the superior merits of this institution.

Tuition fees low, and scholarships good in thirty-six colleges.

By reason of the ability and fidelity of the principal and instructors of this institution, and his many truly superior advantages, it has gained an unsurpassed popularity, and through nearly sixteen years of prosperous business it has enjoyed the almost unbounded confidence of the business community.

For circulars call at the College office, or address GEO. SOULE, Principal.

N. B.—Soule's Analytic and Philosophic Commercial and Exchange Calculator (880 octavo pages,) the great arithmetical work of the age and which no student, teacher, accountant or business man should be without, is for sale at principal stationers and at the office of Soule's Commercial College. oc17 1m

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

Treat the Human Machine Gently.—The winding passage, thirty feet in length, through which the main portion of the waste matter of the system is discharged, is lined with a membrane as delicate as silk, and as sensitive as a net-work of nerves can make it. Neither constipation, colic, diarrhea, dysentery or any other bowel complaint can be cured by abusing and convulsing this tender membrane with a furious purgative. The best and safest remedy in such cases is that mild balsamic and delightful tonic laxative,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient,

which heals, tones and invigorates the irritated intestines, while it relieves them from the morbid humors which provoke abdominal disease. Sold by all druggists. oc31 4t

MEDICAL.

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloodstreaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches;
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1872. NO. 47.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Nov. 13.—The Democratic majority in forty-nine counties is eight thousand, seven hundred and seventy-five.

It is generally conceded that the Democrats have elected all the Congressmen and have a majority in both branches of the Legislature. The vote locating the capital permanently will give Austin a majority of about ten thousand over Houston and Waco.

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—At a meeting of the citizens to consider the present emergencies and future contingencies, Mayor Gaston, who presided, after alluding to proffers of assistance from other points, said, "From our own citizens we had also some manifestations of the same spirit," which made him rejoice that God had given to them large hearts.

Resolutions were adopted in favor of the reconstruction of street lines of the burnt district on a better plan and prohibit Mansard roofs; also in favor of erecting the Merchants' Exchange in some central locality; also favoring an extra session of the Legislature to authorize the issue of building bonds by the city; and for an application to the general government for extension of the new postoffice building.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 15.—Official and unofficial returns from every county elect Baxter, Republican, by seven hundred majority. Other State officers, with Congressman at large, supposed elected, are Democrats.

BUFFALO, Nov. 15.—Horses worked since partial recovery have relapsed. Numerous deaths from kidney and dropsy affections are reported.

BUFFALO, Nov. 16.—There is two feet of snow on the ground, and passenger trains are ten to twelve hours behind.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 16.—Every horse in the fire department has the epizoety.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 16.—The horse disease is prevailing here to a small extent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—There is a marked improvement in the horse disease in Brooklyn to-day. Cars will run all day to-morrow.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—A European letter states that eighty thousand people died of cholera in Russia this year.

Chickens along the Hudson river are dying by hundreds. Turkeys, geese and ducks show signs of the malady.

Dropsy in horses has appeared in all the horse stables. Fifty per cent. of the horses attacked die.

ATLANTA, Nov. 18.—The horse disease has appeared here. There are thirty cases in one livery stable, and many private cases.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 18.—The horse malady is spreading to an alarming extent. No fatal results reported. Cartage and drayage advanced two to four hundred per cent. Four of the principal livery stables are closed.

TOPEKA, KAN., Nov. 19.—William P. Ross has been elected chief of the Cherokee nation, in place of Lewis Downing, deceased.

Dispatches from the end of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, on the western line of this State, represent that buffalo are so plentiful that the trains cannot be run with safety. They roam along the track in immense numbers, making their way south.

FOREIGN.

MATAMORAS, Nov. 13.—General Ceballos, military governor of Sinalea, announces the pacification of that State without bloodshed.

General Diaz has surrendered, and given his parole to present himself at the City of Mexico.

President Lerdo congratulates the country on the complete restoration of peace. There is great rejoicing at the capital.

BERLIN, Nov. 14.—Prince Bismarck is ill, and his physician has gone to Varsein to attend him.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—The Council Royal of the Geographical Society have passed resolutions thanking Mr. Bennett for the generous and philantbropic spirit in which he conceived the idea of relieving Dr. Livingstone, and supplied funds for the purpose. The council has voted Mr. Stanley a Victoria gold medal of the date of 1873, anticipating the year.

ROME, Nov. 16.—Signor Sella, minister of finance, having addressed an official communication to the Pope, guaranteeing payment to his holiness of the annuity voted to him by the Italian Parliament, Cardinal Antonelli has sent a reply to the minister, notifying him that the Pope declines to receive the annuity.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—A dispatch from Stralsund, of to-day's date, reports that eighty vessels were totally wrecked in the late gale. The town was considerably damaged by inundation.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 18.—Advices from the provinces show that the wreck and ruin caused by the hurricane is enormous. At many ports the sea embankments and drainage works have been demolished. The loss of life is very great.

The damage done in the Island of Falstir, known, for its fertility, as the orchard of Denmark, will exceed a million rix dollars.

MADAIN, Nov. 19.—During the session of the lower branch of the Cortes, yesterday, Senor Rias announced that a system of trial by jury would be established in Spain before the first of December.

Good News for the Texas Railroad Enterprise.

SAMUEL H. KENNEDY, ESQ., NEW ORLEANS—Dear Sir: Referring to our respects of yesterday, we now have the pleasure to inform you, and through you our friends in your city, that Governor William Sprague has joined our syndicate, and has this day, at a meeting of our board of directors, been duly elected president of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company. Mr. Latham was elected vice president, and will reside in your city. The contract entered into between the company and Bushnell and associates, has been approved by the directors, with the promise on the part of the contractors to commence work forthwith and push the same to completion.

The contract between this company and Mr. Ward, of Detroit, to build the road from Vermilionville to Shreveport, has also been approved by the directors this day, and we will cause our secretary to forward to you a copy of the same.

We congratulate the citizens of New Orleans upon the good prospects of having both roads completed at an early day, and trust now that you will do all in your power to re-establish the credit of our securities, especially of the State bonds, in order to make our New York and Boston friends feel that they have a reasonably fair security for the money they have invested and are still investing in your State.

Mr. Ward (as you will see from the contract which will be sent to you) requires a new charter for himself and associates for the Shreveport branch, which is fair and necessary, and we trust that your citizens will aid him in obtaining it early in the session.

We are, dear sir, yours very truly,
J. & W. SELIGMAN & Co.

ANECDOTE OF REV. PETER CARTWRIGHT.—Many anecdotes could be told of this eccentric and talented man, but there is one too good to let pass. He once had a dispute with a doctor relative to religion. The doctor said he wanted honest and unequivocal answers to a few questions.

"Did you ever hear religion?" "No." "Did you ever smell religion?" "No." "Did you ever taste religion?" "No." "Did you ever feel religion?" "Yes." "Now, then," said the doctor, with apparent triumph, "I have proved beyond a doubt, by four respectable witnesses, that religion is not seen, heard, smelled or tasted, and but one solitary witness, feeling, has testified that it is an experimental fact." The weight of evidence is overwhelming, and you must give it up." Cartwright asked: "Did you ever see a pain?" "No." "Did you ever hear a pain?" "No." "Did you ever smell a pain?" "No." "Did you ever taste a pain?" "No." "Did you ever feel a pain?" "Certainly I did, sir." The doctor and his family were converted.

AS A MATTER OF FACT, we do not realize Christ's representative, the Holy Spirit. If we did, how encouraged we should be! "I cannot pray," says one. You cannot pray? You never could. But "the Spirit himself helpeth our infirmities." Pray, then, my friend, when you cannot pray, for he maketh intercession.

TRUE devotion does not consist in a long face, regulation sighs and penitent words; it consists in devout deeds, in charitable words, in a sweet, tender, elevated, pure life, that influences and betters every one who inhales the same atmosphere.

FROM THE WORK.

CARTHAGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As the Conference year is drawing to a close I thought it right to let the friends of Methodism know what the Lord has done for us on this circuit. We have had a general revival in the church, which resulted in sixty-two accessions, twenty-four of whom were heads of families; twenty-one adults baptized, and nineteen children.

J. M. WEEMS.

FAYETTE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: During the year now about to close it has been my pleasure to receive about thirty persons into the church on this circuit. We have had no great revivals, but the Lord has been with us, and we have had some refreshing seasons. Some of the churches under my pastoral charge are in a good spiritual state, and I trust all of them are in a hopeful condition. We have on this work seven churches and nearly four hundred members.

W. B. LEWIS, P. C.

FAYETTE, November, 1872.

GARLANDSVILLE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed my protracted meetings on the Garlandsville circuit—five in all. We had a few accessions at all of the appointments. The circuit is in a tolerably good condition spiritually, but not by any means what it might be. This is probably owing to the want of more preaching. There is not an effective local preacher in the bounds of this circuit. Finances are behind, but the stewards are working faithfully. Conference collections are being responded to right well.

L. P. MEADOR, P. C.

HILLSBORO, MISS., Nov. 12, 1872.

LAKE CIRCUIT, BRANDON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our fourth quarterly meeting embraced the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh of October. Our beloved presiding elder was present. There was a good attendance of the official members, all of whom seem to have discharged their various duties faithfully, especially the stewards. The financial condition of the circuit is good. The stewards settled with Bro. F. M. Williams in full. Each steward pledged his church for the balance due their pastor, Bro. G. W. Chatfield. The Lord has powerfully blessed Bro. Chatfield's labors the present year. There has been a gracious revival at every appointment; about sixty accessions to date. The general state of the church is very good. The Sunday school cause is in a very flourishing condition.

L. M. HOUTON.

NOVEMBER 4, 1872.

PONTCHATOULA MISSION.—Mr. Editor: I cannot say the general state of the Methodist Episcopal Church on Pontchatoula mission is very good However, there is one appointment that is doing well, to wit: Joiner's church, or Ebenezer. I commenced here last January with six members, and now we have twenty-four—two having died during the year—making twenty accessions this year. Several of these were old backsliders whose lamp had well-nigh gone out. There is but one Sunday school on the work. I have used every effort in my power to establish Sunday schools, but to no purpose. The Sons of Temperance are doing a great work at Pontchatoula. I hope to see some change for good in the church yet as to finances before I leave for Conference. What shall I say? Well, all that I can say of them is that they are let alone with energy. The poor preacher that comes on this work will need have no fears of being very sorely afflicted with money.

T. B. WALDEN.

SPRINGFIELD, LA., Nov. 5, 1872.

GAINESVILLE CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This pastoral charge embraces five appointments—Gainesville, Sumterville, Warsaw, Ramsey and Soule chapels—having a membership of one hundred and forty-one. The church has been enlarged this year by thirty-nine accessions, and is now in a healthful state. If the assessments of the stewards and financial board be not all met, I think the arrearage will not be large.

Through the liberality of Bro. McDaniel, of Sumterville, the pastor of this work will receive gratuitously a house and lot in which to reside so long as the church will use it for that purpose. The Methodists of Gainesville, with the aid of other brethren and friends, have done nobly this year, in that they began and have completed an elegant house for divine service at a cost of about $3,700. In his dedicatory sermon, on the twentieth ultimo, Bishop Paine spoke of it as a "beautiful church," and you know that Bishops mean what they say; and have at command the right word, and know how to speak it in season. Our venerable Bishop's visit and labors in Gainesville were highly appreciated and profitable, giving universal satisfaction not only to his own people, but to all others in attendance. What a tower of strength these Bishops are! Having the prestige of a great and good name, and being our representative men, they are heard as having qualifications and authority to teach. The dedication came off at the time of our fourth Quarterly Conference. Dr. S. H. Cox was present and remained for several days, doing good service in the subsequent meetings.

ALEX. HOON, Pastor.

SUMTERVILLE, Nov. 7, 1872.

CASTOR CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On Saturday last Bro. L. P. Sheppard and myself began a meeting at Warner's school house, on the Castor circuit, which lasted four days, resulting in a number of conversions and twenty-six accessions to the church—all good material. This is a point at which we had no organized society previous to this meeting, the country being under the control of the Baptists, except a few Methodists who had moved into the country from the older States, and who had felt themselves to be too few in numbers and too feeble in means to undertake to set up housekeeping in church organization; hence Methodism was something new in that community. Many of the young people had never been to a Methodist church or heard a Methodist preach previous to this time. They had been taught to regard the Baptist as the true and only church of Jesus Christ—that through its portals only could the soul enter heaven; that he who should attempt to reach the glory-world through any other way than by immersion into and from that church was a thief and a robber. Then how disappointed were many of those people to find that Methodist meetings were conducted in decency and in order—that Methodist preaching is plain, practical, truthful and powerful even to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, as taking hold upon the hearts and consciences of the hardest and most obdurate sinner, causing him to cry out: "Sirs, what shall I do to be saved?" At the closing service the impressive ordinance of baptism was administered to a number of adults and infants, which, I have no doubt, removed much of the prejudice which heretofore existed in that community against affusion and infant baptism.

Immediately after the organization of the society by the election of class-leader, secretary and steward, a committee was appointed to procure the ground and proceed at once to the building of a suitable house in which they and their children might worship the God of their fathers according to the dictates of their conscience.

There is much denominational spirit prevailing in various portions of the country toward our people by the Baptists. Their ministry labor hard to keep their people from attending Methodist appointments They are afraid of the light and truth of the gospel as taught by the Methodist ministry; and well may they dread the truth, for when their people do break through the restraints thrown around them, and come out to our appointments, they find that the truth has been suppressed and misrepresentations made, so that the prejudices of many are broken down, and a feeling of respect takes the place of prejudice. The cause of Methodism is prospering in all this part of the country, carrying light and truth into regions of darkness, and mildness and joy into the abodes of cruelty.

As our people are beginning to sell cotton, and to have some money which they can spare in the way of subscribing for the ADVOCATE, I hope to be able in a short time to send in a good list of subscribers, accompanied with the cash. The ADVOCATE should be a fixture in every Methodist family in the South.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

BY O. P. FITZGERALD, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: I am so pleased with the weekly visits of your paper that more than once I have been "moved" to drop you a line from this side of the continent. I do like the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Its editorials are timely, evangelical and classically elegant in style. Its selections show care and good judgment—they are never slip-shod. Its mechanical execution is excellent. It does me good. It cannot fail to be a blessing wherever it goes. We have had the pleasure of greeting two of your editorial predecessors in California—both Bishops. (To one who dreads the episcopacy, your tripod would seem to be a perilous seat.) Like your predecessors, I believe you are doing double duty, being both pastor and editor. May your reward be in proportion!

The three Conferences on the Pacific coast have been held—the Oregon, the Pacific and the Los Angeles. Bishop McTyeire presided to the great satisfaction of all. The Southern Methodist Church has made progress during the past year—such progress as is encouraging in a missionary field like this. The net increase of members in the Pacific Conference was only fifty-seven. Yet, all things considered, we are thankful for this result, and we take courage from it. In the Los Angeles Conference the percentage of increase is greater—about twenty-five per cent., as I have it to-day from the highest authority. The figures are not before me. In Oregon we have more than held our own. We have done more in the way of church and parsonage building than during any former year of our history, I believe. The three preachers who have gone from us to the Northern Church during the last two years have gone alone. So far as I know, not a soul has followed them outside of their own family circles. The chief result of these defections on the part of these preachers has been to demonstrate the fact that Southern Methodists in California are as true as any on earth. Our late Annual Conference at Santa Rosa was remarkable for the manifestation made of uncalculating, unfaltering devotion to the work of the church. At the missionary anniversary the enthusiasm rose to a height that would have melted the ice around the hearts of the apathetic stay-at-homes in the old Conferences. When we talk missionary talk here we speak of what we know something about, for we are right in the missionary field. The transfers we have received during the last year have strengthened us. This cannot be said of all our transfers heretofore. The mistake has sometimes been made of sending to our new fields and foreign missions the men who volunteer, rather than the men who are needed. Novices and superannuates are not the men needed to organize and train the church in new fields. With this truism I close this long and rambling paragraph.

Our church school, the Pacific Methodist College, located at Santa Rosa, is succeeding even beyond our hopes. There are now one hundred and sixty-six students in the institution. The school building is inferior to none in the State. At the late Conference an agent was appointed to raise money to pay off a debt on the building and to endow the college. Your correspondent is the happy man. Of all the classes of service demanded of ministers of the gospel, this is the least desirable; but, as the church and society are now constituted, it is certainly not the least important. Real estate, though little of it was owned by the primitive church, seems indispensable to its operations in this commercial and artificial age. By the way, have you read the magnificent article on "Ecclesiastical Accumulation of Wealth" in the last number of the Southern Review? It is truly what I have called it—a magnificent paper, the work of one who seems to be at once lawyer, statesman and Christian. He does not favor rich ecclesiastical corporations or rich ecclesiastics. Neither does he favor posthumous Christian benevolence, but rather that "the rich should be their own almoners and executors, being, while yet alive, rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Query: Do our people appreciate and sustain the Southern Review as they ought to do?

Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Sargent leave California next week—the former by the great railroad, the latter by sea. Their visit has been a delight and a blessing. There is a whisper that Dr. McFerrin may come to see us. What a stir would take place! Not only a multitude of Tennesseeans scattered over this coast, but thousands of others would turn out to see and hear that great evangelical tribune, that man of God and of the people, John B. McFerrin. A visit from him will do him and us good. If he is a reader of your paper, let him take this hint and turn his eyes to the Occident.

The delightful month I spent in New Orleans in 1866 gave me a life-long love for its hospitable people and a peculiar interest in the success of our branch of the church therein. Every item in your columns concerning the several city charges is read with interest, and I never think of the Crescent City but with a fresh glow at my heart. Though perhaps not what she was before the spoiler came, there is life in her yet. Like San Francisco, her mixed population need the gospel of Jesus Christ in its simplicity and divine power. Enough for the present.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE CITY OF GOD AND THE CHURCH-MAKERS.

We have not had time to fully examine this work, but we have been impressed with the conviction that the work brings out distinctively a great and fundamental truth in reference to the true nature of the church. A contributor sends us the following notice of the book:

"The City of God and the Church-Makers. An Examination into Structural Christianity, and Criticism of Christian Scribes and Doctors of the Law. By R. Abbey. Published by Messrs. Hurd & Houghton, New York. $1.50.

"This, the last, and in our humble judgment the best of all of Dr. Abbey's works, is a neat little volume of some three hundred pages, and is properly the sequel of Ecclesiastical History, Church and Ministry, and Ecce Ecclesia—the best, because we believe and hope that it is destined to effect great good by the revolution and correction of many theological blunders taught among and by Christians of every age and sect, which blunders press like an incubus upon the cause of truth, paralyzing the efforts of thousands in their pursuit of peace and serenity of religious belief. The doctor opens the work with a note, in which he gives the subject, viz.: the identity of the church in all ages, and the denial of the unnatural and mythical doctrine of its corporate formation by Jesus Christ; alleging that out of this error, widely and universally taught by theologians, has grown nine-tenths of all the troubles between the churches, while it is the fundamental doctrine underlying every grade of Romanism and High Churchism. Briefly, that concession is the most formidable argument ever granted to the enemies of Protestant belief. The first two hundred pages, to the well-informed reader, necessarily become monotonous, being a review of the teachings of about two hundred authors cited in the work, his own name gracefully leading off the list. The style of the author stands out prominently here—bold, positive and fearless, often with a stinging keenness that quickens the interest of the reader, and with a spirit that compromises not with error, be it taught by sage or saint. The remainder of the work, numbering sixteen short but interesting chapters, is devoted chiefly to subjects pertaining to the church, or the City of God, as it is styled by the author. Of these the exegesis of Matthew xvi, "On this rock I will build my church," is most strikingly original and conclusive, nor do we recollect to have ever seen or heard similar views entertained by any other divine. The work is written for the masses of the people, and is destined to command attention, especially as many of the authors criticised are still living, and the pungency and force of the same does not impinge lightly. In the main, we heartily assent to the views of the learned author, and sincerely hope that he will be read by all, resulting in the arrest and correction of the many blunders therein exposed."

A PREACHER WANTED.

MR. EDITOR: I want to supply Jacksboro station with a good preacher, who has no family. There is an office there, well furnished, for him. Jacksboro is in a fine, healthy region of country. A live man is desired.

The Northwest Texas Conference is the finest region of country in the world. This is an inviting field for young men, and we need a dozen more men than we have to supply our present work. My postoffice is Waxahachie, lock box 119, Texas.

IN THE SHADOW.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

I walk through darkened paths, yet know
My Father marks the way I go;
I cannot see his tender smile,
But feel his clasping hand the while;
And, since he heeds the sparrow's fall,
I trust his love, in spite of all.

Borne through the dark by loving arms,
I sometimes shrink with vague alarms:
Yet closer cling that I may hear
The voice that whispers in mine ear.
"Oh, trembling soul," it says to me,
"Rest in the love that clings to thee!"

I cannot tell if long the way
By which I go, through night to day;
But, soon or late, I know my feet
Will walk in sunshine, broad and sweet:
And, soon or late, before mine eyes
The radiant hills of peace uprise.

THE INFIDEL.

BY GEORGIA E. ROLAND.

At the still hour of midnight little Ada awoke from her troubled sleep, and tossed uneasily from side to side.

"What is the matter with my darling," asked her father tenderly, as he softly brushed the silken curls back from the burning brow.

"Where's mamma? Ada wants her to pray."

For a week the little sufferer had lain upon her bed. Her disease was scarlet fever. To-night, as she closed her eyes in sleep, the exhausted mother, urged by her husband, retired to take a few moments' rest, leaving him to watch alone. He had often seen the child, as she knelt with clasped hands beside her mother, lisping her evening prayer; and since illness confined her to her bed he had seen his wife kneel beside it, and, with those clasped hands inclosed in her own, listen to the child as she softly murmured the Lord's Prayer. He was not surprised, therefore, when the little one expressed a desire to pray.

"Mamma sleeps, my darling. When she awakes I will call her."

"No, no; Ada sleep then."

"Then I will call her now, my precious one."

"Poor mamma! Her's tired.—Don't wake her, papa. You pray 'our Father' for Ada."

"Ada says it sweetly. Say it for papa."

"No, no; Ada too sick. Her can't talk much. Papa pray 'our Father' like mamma did last night."

The dark eyes looked into his. He could not resist their silent pleading. Kneeling, he took her clasped hands within his own, while for the first time since he had murmured it for his mother he uttered the prayer given to man by a loving Savior. At such an hour, under such circumstances, he could not utter the solemn words carelessly. He understood their recognition of God's sovereignty. As he slowly uttered the words, "Thy will be done," his heart almost stood still with fear.

For years he had been an infidel. His mind had wandered through volumes of philosophic speculation, and he had imbibed the proud, unbending, godless spirit of infidel writers. He had sneered at religion until his wife's conversion. From that time he had been continually on the lookout for defects of character that might cast contempt upon the religion she professed. But lo! she was entirely changed. Her character was improved. Her everyday life was regulated by the Bible. He could discover no defect which would have sanctioned his skepticism. She was a consistent Christian, a happy spirit, and her constant, unpretending piety taught him to respect Christianity, at which he had once sneered.

Soothed by his compliance, Ada lay perfectly still, her eyes devoutly closed. Gazing upon his child, the father indulged serious thoughts. There must be a supreme will—one superior to his own—to which all things were subject, or else why could he not control circumstances? Why could he not avert the impending loss? Why could he not snatch his idol from the grasp of ruthless death? He had tried his utmost to save her, but his efforts were unsuccessful. Evidently some higher Being than himself was speaking now.

"Talk about Jesus, papa. Ada loves him."

Talk about Jesus! What a request to this godless man. He could not speak, but silently gazed upon his child.

"O so sweet! Ada likes it." The eyes opened and she pointed upward with a joyous smile. "See up there, papa! Ada wants to go."

"Where, my darling?"

"To play with the angels. Don't you hear them sing? O papa, papa, ain't it sweet. Take Ada." She attempted to rise from the bed, but, encircling the slender form with his arms, he pressed her to his heart.

"Will Ada leave papa?"

Still looking upward, she stretched forth her arms. "Ada's coming. Papa come too—mamma—little sister—dear mam—."

The lips ceased to move, the arms fell powerless across her father's—the little soul had gone to its Maker. The sorrow-stricken parent retained the lifeless form in a firm embrace. The strong frame trembled beneath the blow. "My child, my Ada, gone—forever!"

Was it forever? asked his questioning mind. Had this sweet little one indeed ceased to exist? Had she lived for a time, exercising all the charms of innocent childhood, cheering his home with the sunshine of her presence, endearing every heart to her, finally to walk out into non-existence? No, he could not believe that death was annihilation. There was a hereafter. There must be a heaven for such pure, innocent spirits to dwell in, and thither had his Ada gone. Heaven was a reality; or why should that little cherub have ever brightened his home? Why should that clinging baby-touch and soft baby-voice have ever charmed his heart, if he was to meet her no more? That lifeless form, soon to become a moldering mass of dust, was not all that remained of the idolized dead. There had been an immortal soul in that "earthly tenement," and heaven was henceforth its eternal habitation. Now his own heart went longingly forth to it. He kissed the icy brow, then passed to the side of his sleeping wife and waited her awakening to break the sad news to her. Her eyes soon unclosed.

"Does Ada still sleep?"

"She sleeps to awake no more in this world, Lou."

"O Alfred!" The loving mother rushed forward to her darling, but dropped in a swoon beside the bed.

'Tis evening. Little Ada's remains have been conveyed to their last resting place. She is sorely missed by those loving parents, and Lula, the only remaining child, has sobbed herself to sleep because she has "no Ada to play with."

It is hard for that mother to give up her darling. But gradually her Christian heart soars above its affliction. "The Lord giveth and the Lord hath taken away" came home to her with force. She had made a full consecration of herself and family to God. Now the trial had come. He saw fit to call one home; but infinite wisdom could not err. In fervent prayer she raised her wounded heart to the Heavenly Physician, asking for resignation to the divine will, and strength to bear her bereavement. Her husband sat with his head bowed upon his hand. His thoughts wandered through the past. He had reviled the attributes of the Supreme Being and denied his existence. He had considered the Bible "a well-written novel," and Christianity "a cunningly-devised fable." Gradually his infidelity was weakened. His wife's piety loosened the fetters; but they did not drop off. Now, as he listens to the elevating sentiments uttered by her; sees her confidence in God unshaken; as he views the serenity which gradually steals over the pale, careworn face—proof of consolation received from above—he is awakened to a sense of the beauty of the Christian faith, and he wonders at its power. How it seemed to overarch the gloom of earth with heavenly brightness! He feels his loss keenly. Where can he seek consolation? What was the speculation of all ages to him now? How philosophy mocked him! It could not give him back his child, but would fain deprive him of her forever. "Passing away" was written on everything the earth contained. Aroused by judgment, he would now know whither he was passing. If the God of the Bible was the true God, then he was a most miserable creature. How sin-stained was his soul! What cause he had to tremble! He told his wife of his thoughts, and what a source of happiness it was to her. "Verily, 'he doeth all things well.' A deep shadow rests upon us, Alfred; but shadows are needed to chasten our spirits. Uninterrupted sunshine is in heaven alone. Oh, thank God, my husband, if the loss of our little one has led you thus far toward him." This turning of her husband's thoughts into a different channel Mrs. Aubrey recognized as the working of the Holy Spirit. The Bible now became the doctor's sole study. He read many authors on the evidences of Christianity. His research was profitable. Gradually he was brought to yield up old prejudices and to confess that Christianity was of divine origin. He wondered how he could have ever doubted what he now believed to be unquestionably true; and humiliating was the candid answer that, in consequence of long indulgence in sin and pride, ignorance and sluggish inattention took possession of his soul. His research being perfectly satisfactory, he cast aside his philosophic works as being a mass of sheer humbug. He became deeply interested in religion, cultivated the acquaintance of godly people, attended to the "means of grace," and soon the once callous heart was touched by the "transforming hand" of divine love. The monster—infidelity—fled from him, and he entered into the joys of heaven's pure religion. He had received a severe blow, but it had been dealt him in love by the hand of an all-wise Being.

Reader, God calls us in various ways. Has he not been calling you these many years? Disappointments, sickness, loss of friends, loss of some member of your family—all are calls from God. Are you an infidel? He thus shows you that he exists, and manifests to you his sovereignty. "He giveth and he taketh away when he pleases." "He works, and none can hinder." Are you a believer, yet a wanderer from his fold? He calls you to a sense of your sin. He calls one and all. O answer him ere it is eternally too late. He calls you—then he is nigh. O seek him while he may yet be found. He calls you—then he loves you. Go and receive mercy, else the time will come when he will call you as he did the rich man: "Thou fool, this night will thy soul be required of thee." That call you must answer, whether willing or not, and then—. O reader, look forward—your doom! Can you bear it? "Depart from me." Can you depart forever into unceasing torments? In God's name, reflect. Turn unto the Lord ere eternity dawns upon you.

IS A SUPERANNUATED PREACHER

A Member of the Quarterly Conference within the Bounds of which he Resides?

MR. EDITOR: Having seen several articles in your paper on the above subject, all growing out of a certain decision made by Bishop Pierce, and believing that the brethren have misunderstood both the Bishop and the Discipline on that subject, I beg the privilege of making a brief statement of what I have understood and practiced upon this subject for the last fifty years. I do not, however, claim any authority over any other brother to settle law questions.

First. All Methodist preachers are embraced in two classes, viz.: traveling and local preachers.—See Discipline. We have no preachers outside of these two classes. The traveling preachers are divided into effective, supernumerary and superannuated. The superannuated preacher is one whom his Annual Conference has released from the responsibilities of labor for a time. But this has not disturbed in any degree his relation to his Annual Conference. He is still a traveling preacher, though without work for a time and for a reason—held ready to return to his work as a traveling preacher so soon as the cause of his superannuation shall be removed. Now the only difference between him and any or all of the other preachers is that the Bishop has not the authority to appoint him to any work while sustaining the relation to his Conference of a superannuate. Consequently the Bishop has no authority to say he shall be a member of this or that Quarterly Conference, for that would be virtually to station him, which the Bishop has no power to do without his consent. This, I understand, is the ground intended to be covered by the Bishop's decision. But this has nothing to do with his voluntary connection with any Quarterly Conference within whose bounds he may be disposed to rest while a superannuate. He is at full liberty to fix his home where it may best suit him, and there he falls into the nearest Quarterly Conference. This is a matter of choice with him, not the appointment of the Bishop.

Now for the law governing the case. Discipline, page 50, section 4: "Question 1. Who shall compose a Quarterly Conference? Answer. All the traveling and local preachers," etc. Now we have seen that the superannuate is a "traveling preacher." Well, then, as a traveling preacher—now at rest—within the bounds of that circuit where he has chosen to cast his lot, he is, according to the Discipline, a member of that Quarterly Conference as truly as any other traveling preacher.

Objection. But on page 37 of the Discipline there is a distinction made between "traveling, supernumerary and superannuated preachers."

Answer. If this passage proves anything against the conclusion above reached, it proves too much. It proves that supernumerary preachers are not traveling preachers, and that they have no right in a Quarterly Conference; which, I suppose, none will contend for. But see this refuted—Discipline, page 62—where the superannuates are named.

My first lessons on church government were under the general superintendency of Bishops McKendree and Roberts, and followed by Bishop Soule. My presiding elders were sage men. It happened to the writer, in his early ministerial years, that he was for a short time put upon the superannuated list, and the question came up in the Quarterly Conference: "Has he, being superannuated, a right to sit in the Quarterly Conference as a member of it?" The official answer was: "Yes; he is a traveling preacher, and the Discipline says, 'All the traveling preachers.'" I have never known a different practice. I respectfully think it unkind to shut out the old men who have worn themselves out for the church. I think their presence and counsel in the Quarterly Conferences might do much good. The young men need their presence and help.

O. FISHER.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, Oct. 31, 1872.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR: Your issue of the twelfth of September contained a communication from the writer, speaking of the condition of Texas in some points of view. After speaking of the prosperity of the State in various regards, the following paragraph is near the close:

"What appears to us the most favorable feature is the certainty that our State government will in a few months be in the hands of white men. Then we shall be the freest and, if we will be, the happiest people in the South, with a future so vast, so full of promise that we fail to comprehend its import."

This communication arrested the attention of Bro. Norris, "pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Bristol, New Hampshire." He misapprehended the meaning of the sentence just repeated. His candor and charity and very apparent desire to arrive at the truth calls forth this explanation. Bro. Norris' misapprehension results from his misunderstanding the meaning of the expression as to the "government being in the hands of white men." We understand by it that the government shall be administered for the good of the whole, rather than in the interest of a class. If I had thought of the ADVOCATE going to those who did not understand these things I should have been more select in my words. While the country is in the hands of a party professing to administer it in the interest of the negro, and who, the white men claim, have an utter disregard for the interest, welfare or happiness of the whites, the fact is every important office is in the hands of men with white skins and straight hair. The Governor and all the judiciary are of this class, as well as all the legislative body, except half a dozen at any one time. A few underlings of the police department are more or less remotely of African descent. These offices are, to a great extent, from the Governor's place down, filled by men from other States who have never sympathized with the feelings, views, interests and principles of the great majority of the citizens of the State, and of many who, disappointed in their aspirations in another direction, have renounced former principles for the money to be found by that means.

The prosperity of the State has been in spite of what many consider the worst government that could exist under a Republican constitution, that has resulted in an enormous State debt, and the desire of at least two-thirds of the voters of the State to have the Governor impeached. The terrors of the government to the very best of our citizens have been a very great drawback to our prosperity. The taxation has been enormously increased beyond all precedent since the present incumbents have been in office. The people have been taxed to the extent of all the surplus product of the State, and in some places much beyond. The Legislature has saddled upon a people whom they found free from debt an indebtedness of several millions of dollars.

The question is then asked: "How can you, then, account for the prosperity described in your letter of September 12?" It is owing, first, to the wonderful exuberance of our soil; second, to the confident anticipation of a change in the course of the early future government of the State; third, to the fact that so many of the cotton States east of us are hopelessly under as had a government and a heavier debt, without the hope of recuperation from so fertile a soil and other natural resources, and of a constant flood of immigration, that may divide the debt; fourth, to the expectation that the debt will be decided illegal and unconstitutional. S. D. AKIN.

NOVEMBER 6, 1872.

The Presiding Eldership Discussion.

MR. EDITOR: This question is occupying a good deal of space in our church papers at this time. Some such matter is sure to find a place on the carpet just previous to a General Conference. There are several reasons for this. Among them may be mentioned the following: In the first place, we have chronic reformers—those who seem to think that unless we have quadrennial organic changes the church is not progressing, and therefore behind the age.

And then we have fine writers—those who write well on any subject that comes up (equally well on either side,) and who write just for the "fun of the thing"—write to keep up the excitement. And then, to speak the truth, we have disappointed, ambitious place-seekers, who rise to the surface by virtue of or through the mere force of their own boldness. Again, we have good writers and thinkers who mistake the question altogether—who form a diagnosis without feeling the pulse or looking at the tongue. Such hastily prescribe organic changes, when change is not "the one thing needful." Their practice is to throw the subject into fits, because they are famous in fits—it is the one thing they can cure.

In the case before us, change is not what the church needs; so far as we can see. It cannot be until some-[illegible] discussion has grown out of a palpable abuse of a good thing. It is not the "thing" to be changed, but the abuse to be corrected.

A more responsible and important place or office than that of presiding elder is not in the church, when it is filled—when the work is done. This is what the church contracts for—the work in the spirit of the gospel, and not the abuse of the office. Upon the same grounds the church would do away with the office of pastor, and in the end do away with itself—administer upon its own estate.

We have incompetent presiding elders—many chronic cases. They are presiding elders because "they are unfit for anything else"—presiding elders seemingly from force of habit. They run for years in the same groove—they have the look, the gait, the habit, and to take them out, or make a change, and the Conference incurs the expense of a funeral. Such go to their quarterly meetings on Saturday morning—from home—furnish a "few thoughts on the fifteenth Psalm;" in a lifeless way ask the usual questions, require no reports from the preachers; on the contrary, discourage it on the ground that it gives the recording steward too much work; permits the Sunday school superintendent to choke down the love-feast; closes the service on Sunday morning, and drives twenty-five miles home. Hence all this fuss and writing in the church papers about doing away with the office. To our shame, let it be said, we have just as trifling pastors. The truth is, if as pastors we would all get religion, then hold special presiding elders' meetings, and get our "big men" converted, and let us have presiding elders in the fullness and spirit of the office and work, the church would not be disturbed by questions of organic change. And, in addition, some poor, afflicted (?) presiding elders—the writer among the number—would not be scared nearly to death for fear of losing an occupation. ***

FROM TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR: The seventh session of the Northwest Texas Conference was held at Belton, October 23–28. The itinerants were very generally present. Probably half of the lay delegates were here. Two of our number answered the roll-call with Andrews, Soule, McKendree, Asbury and the great host that have been transferred to the Celestial Conference over the river—James M. Boyd and Guy C. McWilliams. They each leave large families entirely dependent. The Conference devised liberal things for their support. May the Lord sustain them by his providence and comfort them with his grace!

We had six transfers at the Conference, and of the class that we greatly need. From the Tennessee Conference, J. R. Randall; from the Memphis, D. M. Fly; from the Western, W. W. Jared; from one of the Georgia, Charles E. Brown; from the Mississippi, Josiah M. Pugh; from the Texas, William G. Connor, D. D.; and since Conference we hear from the Louisville of H. C. McQuown, and from the St. Louis of S. C. Littlepage, our tried and true comrade of former years. We had one readmission—J. P. Mussett—and four admissions on trial. Notwithstanding all this, we have seven appointments to be supplied. We had a session harmonious, pleasant and profitable. Perhaps, Mr. Editor, you have never witnessed a Conference session where there was less speaking. Louisiana has true cause for high self-gratulation over the contribution she has made to the Episcopal College. We were pleased even beyond our high expectations with the ability displayed in the chair and in the pulpit, and, I may add, on the platform.

Our increase for the year has been from 10,024 to 12,138—equal to 2,114 members. The Conference was formed six years ago with 32 efficient preachers; this year 67 received appointments. So you see God is blessing us.

I should send a list of the appointments, but that you have seen them in the Texas Advocate before now. S. D. AKIN.

REV. ANDREW PEACE, of the St. Louis Conference, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, died at Arcadia, on the morning of the twenty-sixth ultimo, of typhoid pneumonia. He was taken ill there while in attendance upon the session of the Conference. This painful intelligence reaches us as we go to press. We can only announce the solemn fact, without the comment due to the memory of this venerable minister of the gospel, who was among the oldest and best beloved of our Missouri itinerant preachers.

LET NO ONE count the number of his friends till they are bolted in the sieve of his own adversity, for there is much bran in prosperous friendship.

Obituaries.

DIED, on the tenth ultimo, in Carthage, Mississippi, THOMAS W., infant son of T. W. and M. P. [illegible], aged one year and five months. Little Tommy is gone to him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." J. M. WEEMS.

JOHN EDWARD, infant son of John M. and Jennie E. Moore, was taken to heaven June 27, aged three months and seven days.

This beautiful little bud of life was lent to our brother and sister for a little season to cheer them, and taken again to attract them to the "palace of angels and of God."

"Taken from his parents' side,
He hath angels now to guide;
Pure and gentle forms above,
In a clime where all is love,
Gently lead him by the hand,
Through the bright ambrosial land."

AMICUS W. WILLIAMS.

DIED, near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, August 17, 1872, of congestion of the lungs, MRS. CASSY FAIRER, daughter of John and Catherine Wallis. She was born in York district, South Carolina, October 28, 1808, and was married to A. D. Fairer, in Lauderdale county, Alabama, in 1826. She was the mother of thirteen children, only six surviving her. Her sickness was short—was taken on Tuesday and died on Saturday following. She was delirious from the time danger was apprehended, hence she left no dying testimony. But from her Christian walk through life her friends have a comfortable hope that she has reached the better land in safety. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for thirty years. She was an affectionate wife and mother. May her aged husband and her children and grandchildren so live that they will have a glorious meeting on the sunny banks of the New Jerusalem. J. O. WOODWARD.

Nashville Advocate please copy.

MRS. ADA BARBAQUI REDDITT, consort of Alfred Redditt, Esq., was born in Jefferson county, Arkansas, February 2, 1819, and departed this life October 27, 1872, at Nelson's Landing, Caldwell parish, Louisiana.

Sister Redditt professed the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ at an early age, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1852, in Caldwell parish, Louisiana. When the writer became acquainted with her, in 1871, she still participated in the joys that spring from love to God and our neighbor, and continued to reap those blessings until her death.

A few days preceding her departure she was visited by the pastor of Columbia circuit, who read the first, second and third chapters of James. Afterward she said: "Thank you." The pastor prayed, and sung the "Highlands of Heaven." She said: "That is beautiful." On being questioned about her spiritual welfare—if her prospects were bright for heaven—she replied: "Oh, yes, Bro. Davis, I know that I must die; I feel it. I professed religion quite young. It has comforted me through my all crosses. I feel its comforts now." Being asked if there were any obstacle in her way, she replied: "Oh, no, Bro. Davis; no obstacles. Nothing in the way. All are removed. I am waiting for the Lord to call me. I feel resigned to my Savior's will." Here she seemed to be overcome. She enjoyed the religious services very much. When bidding her adieu she asked to be remembered, and requested another visit. The next time the pastor came her glad spirit was free from mortality—had taken its flight to "the rest that remains to the people of God." R. A. DAVIS.

SISTER ELIZABETH MOORING was born in Greene county, North Carolina, December 10, 1797, and from there emigrated to Tennessee in the year 1821, and thence to Caddo parish, Louisiana, in the fall of 1851, and departed this life September 5, 1872.

Few persons stand the test of adverse criticism, during the period of an ordinary lifetime, unscathed, and fewer pass that ordeal successfully when their days are protracted beyond the usual period—to extreme old age. But there are some who not only do this completely and triumphantly, but who deserve and receive the reverent homage of their fellow-beings, bestowed in grateful tribute to the eminence of their goodness. Such persons need no monumental inscription to commemorate their virtue, for the memory of them is enshrined upon the heart's most sacred tablets.

There never lived a nobler, grander, purer character than our sainted mother in Israel. Unwavering in purpose and in faith, and of immutable sincerity, her life was consistently noble. Kind, charitable, tender, affectionate and sympathetic and insatiate in her desire to be of service and to do good, she would always sacrifice her own comfort to that of others in the holy martyrdom of her love. This she did as wife, mother, neighbor, and in a memorable manner to the ministers of Jesus, whose company she sought and enjoyed.

She was married to John Mooring, March 9, 1815. She was a member of the Methodist Church for the long period of fifty-seven years. Her Christian example and maternal instructions to her large family of children did not fail to make lasting impressions on their minds and hearts, every one of them having embraced the religion of Jesus—the religion of their mother—and are on the march to meet their honored, sainted mother in glory. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me: Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

AMICUS W. WILLIAMS.

REV. H. G. CARDEN was born in Granger county, Tennessee, December 13, 1824. He professed religion when thirteen years of age; was licensed to preach in 1848; was admitted on trial in the Arkansas Conference in 1849, and was transferred to the Texas Conference in 1854. He died in Fayette county, Texas, August 16, 1872.

But few men naturally possessed so large an amount of mental power as fell to the lot of Bro. Carden. Nature endowed him with an intellect above the common mass of mankind, and he employed it faithfully in the promotion of a great and holy cause. For more than twenty years he stood as a faithful watchman on the walls of Zion, never connecting with his ministerial calling any secular pursuit. His father and mother died when he was quite young, leaving a dependent family of four sisters to be provided for by him and his twin brother, Rev. H. S. Carden. They acquitted themselves nobly in regard to this responsible charge, giving their sisters the best education the country afforded, paying their way out of the meager sums received from their respective pastoral charges.

Bro. Carden's preaching ability was above mediocrity, and in exhortation he was at times positively overwhelming. I have heard him on revival occasions when the congregation would be swayed by his eloquence as trees before the mighty wind. He was thoroughly Methodistic in faith and practice. He loved the church of his choice, and sealed his devotion to her interests by a life consecrated to the ministry of the word.

I knew much of his inner life, having been intimately associated with him, at intervals, for seventeen years. He unbosomed himself to me as he did to but few, and I knew him to be a man of faith and prayer. He and his brother were very much alike in personal appearance and in the style of their preaching. A person had to be very well acquainted with them to distinguish one from the other. They loved each other with great ardor, and for awhile after the death of Rev. B. S. Carden, which occurred in January, 1862, his brother's mind was a little unhinged, so excessive was his grief; but through the mercy of God he was soon restored, and from that time to the day of his death lived, perhaps, nearer the cross than ever before.

Like all faithful followers of God, when death came and laid his iron grasp upon him he was found prepared to meet his God, exclaiming in his last hours: "All is well. The grave has no terrors. I will soon be at rest forever." T. B. BUCKINGHAM.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1872.

AT EVENING-TIME IT SHALL BE LIGHT.

Sweet, dewy stillness falls o'er yonder deep, dim woods,
And Eventag draws the crimson curtains of the west,
While waifs of perfume hither waft on wand'ring winds;
Clasped in thy arms, O Night, how sweet the world doth rest!
The plumed crests of yonder sun-gilt pines are seen,
Dimly and darkly, 'gainst the tender twilight sky,
While the far meadow's wide expanse of paly green
Now in fantastic shadows of the gloaming lie,
And shining lilies droop their dewy eyelids white,
And breathe their fragrant dreams beneath the dim starlight.

Now, oh, my soul! lay down thy burden of the day,
And make of yonder last beam glowing in the west
A pair of wings, to flee all weary, worldly thought,
And take with thankfulness this benison of rest.
Up yonder gleaming pathway of the changeless hills
Now speed, and seek thy blessed Master's pierced feet,
Till all thy trembling with his "love divine" he stills,
And feeds thee, famishing, with promises most sweet;
Thus in his company the darkness shall seem bright,
And thus "at evening-time it shall be light."

O steal stars! far wheeling in your silvern orbs—
Ye shining poems God hath writ on high for men!—
With matchless loveliness our thrilling spirits throb,
And, gazing, dream of glories far beyond our ken.
Oh, stars! fling wide your gates of heav'nly pearl, that we,
Worn with our earthly folly, cares and constant sin,
May lay them all at his dear, wounded feet, and see
Sweet, changeless Mercy bid the weary enter in.
Oh, dying love! thy risen glories are so bright
That shades of doubt must flee, and faith seem almost sight!

Low-warbled songs of night-birds die upon the air,
And morm'rous lullabys the scented woodlands fill,
As Nature folds her em'rald robes and sinks to sleep,
Dreaming within her peaceful bowers, calm and still.
Thus, oh, "beloved!" he giveth ye life's last deep rest—
Folding about ye garments washed in his own blood,
And laying weary ones within his sacred breast;
'Tis thus he safely bears them over Jordan's flood.
Thy love, oh, Christ! will make e'en Death's dark valley bright,
And at life's evening-time it shall be light.

PEDRA.

THE MODERN GREEK LANGUAGE.

A contributor to the Christian Observer gives the following interesting statements:

Much of the beauty of the ancient speech is observable in the modern Greek. Many Turkish and Italian words have been absorbed into the language. A modern Greek could read the orations of Demosthenes without much difficulty, and one who is conversant only with ancient Greek could glean the meaning of an editorial of a newspaper published to-day in Athens or Smyrna. The purity of the old tongue is being rapidly regained by the educated population of Athens. There is a great difference, therefore, in the writings of the purists and the vulgar dialect.

The pronunciation of the ancient Greek, as taught in our school grammars, would be unintelligible to an inhabitant of Attica. That pronunciation rests solely, the writer believes, on the authority of Erasmus. The pronunciation of the moderns is now adopted in lieu of the Erasmian in the schools of England and Scotland, but not in this country. Before stating some of the differences, it is observed that the same text, and an equal number of letters compose the alphabet of the ancient and modern Greek. Beta, however, is sounded like v, as bema, a rostrum, is pronounced vemah (ancient Greek baymah;) delta, like th in thy, as deka, ten, thekkah; gamma before epsilon, iota and upsilon like y, as gigas, a giant, yeegas; zeta, like z, as baptizo, to baptize, vapteezo (Erasmian, baptidzo.) There is no letter for b or for d in modern Greek. The combination mp is used for b, and nt for d in words derived from foreign languages, as mparouti, powder, barootee; ntzami, glass, dshamee. The pronunciation of the diphthongs still farther departs from the Erasmian. We may illustrate some differences by the first line of Homer's Iliad:

Menin aeide, thea, Peleiadeo Achileos.

Erasmian pronunciation:

Mayneen ahaeeday, theah, Paylayeeahdyoh Ahkhilayos.

Modern Greek pronunciation:

Meenin ahadday, theah, Peeleeyahdyoh Ahcheeleeohs.

(The wrath sing, oh goddess, of Achilles, son of Peleus.)

The same accents, acute, grave and circumflex—oxytone, paroxytone, properispome, etc.—the same punctuation—e. g., the use of the semicolon for the interrogation mark, etc.; the same aspirates as in the ancient are used in the modern language. The aspirates, however, mean nothing, and the spiritus lenis is sounded as the spiritus asper; thus hemera, a day, is pronounced eemarah. Apostrophe to denote elision, and the coronis to denote crasis, are used as formerly.

A Greek may understand his written language (like the Jew without the Masoretic points) as well without the accents as with them, and they are often omitted in epistolary communication. There is no indefinite article; the definite ho, he, to is declined exactly as in ancient Greek. The noun has seven declensions, two of which—the second and fifth—are colloquial. One is charmed to see such words as neanias, a youth; anthropos, a man; glossa, a tongue, and thousands of other nouns declined exactly as of old, except in the want of a dual number. The dative case, however, is used only in writing. The adjectives (even the irregular megas, megale, mega, great, and polus, polle, polu, much) are declined and comparod as in the Hellenic Greek. The numerals are absolutely the same. The pronouns are a little different. In the verb, the present, the imperfect and the aorist are declined as in the Attic; but the other tenses are formed by auxiliaries. The optative mood disappears, and the conditional, with auxiliaries, takes its place. Many changes in construction occur, but the inversion of sentences allows greater freedom for euphony than in any other modern tongue. Many curious observations could be made on the use to which familiar words in the ancient Greek New Testament are put, if space afforded. For instance, the word Kurios, constantly translated Lord in the Testament, now means sir, in address, and the plural Kurioi means gentlemen. Witness the following dialogue, which may take place to-day in Athens:

Kale eme ra kurie—Good day, sir.

Sas euchomai, kurie, kalen emeran. I wish you a good morning, sir.

Pos echei ole e oikogeneia—How's your family?

Polu kala, doxa to theo—Pretty well, thank God.

Ti legoun eis ton polin—What's the talk in town?

Echomen kala nea—We have good news.

If of sufficient interest this series of articles will be continued in the exploration of the Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, Persian and Chinese.

THE WISDOM OF GOD.

God has not only created all things beautiful and wonderful in themselves; he has fitted them all to each other; he has made them all by weight and measure; he has formed them, as it were, with a balance in his hand, in such a way that if even one of them had been but a little greater or a little less in proportion to the others, this beautiful world would soon have fallen into ruins, and no living thing could have existed on it."

Do you wish examples of this? They are innumerable—the only difficulty is to choose which to tell you. Let us take the air as the first example. God created the atmosphere on the second day. It has been reckoned that it surrounds the world to the height of about fifty miles above our heads. It might seem to you a very trifling matter if it were a few miles more or less in height—as, for instance, at the top of Mont Blanc—the barometer would stand at sixteen inches, and men and animals would soon be suffocated. If, on the contrary, it were a few miles more in height, the barometer would stand at more than forty seven inches; it would be insupportably hot wherever the rays of the sun could reach, and your lungs could not hear it long. You may judge of it by the Dead sea, where the atmosphere is only a quarter of a mile higher, and where the barometer stands at twenty-nine and three-quarters, but where the heat is excessive, and the air very irritating to the lungs, as we are told in the account of Lieutenant Lynch's expedition. And if the atmosphere were higher still, the winds would be irresistible—our houses and our trees would be thrown down, we should take inflammation in the lungs, and the nature of all things around us would be entirely changed.

Take another example. On the third day God formed the seas and the dry land. If the dry land were a little harder than it is, we could not cultivate it—we could neither plow nor dig. The roots of the plants could not pierce the hard soil, and they would perish. If, on the contrary, the earth were softer than it is, we should sink in the soil, as we do in a plowed field after rain; and neither houses, trees nor plants could be kept firm in the ground. If the water of the sea were heavier, all the fishes would be borne up to the surface, and would be unable to swim in it; and they would die as they do in the Dead sea, whose water is only a quarter heavier than distilled water. And if the water of the sea were lighter, the fish would be too heavy to swim, and would sink down and die at the bottom. If the water of the sea and of the lakes, which always contracts and becomes heavier as it becomes colder, did not cease to obey this law at about the fourth degree above freezing point, the bottom of most of the seas and of all the lakes would be a mass of ice for the greater part of the year; whilst, on the other hand, by this admirable arrangement their depths never freeze.

You may think, perhaps, that it would be a matter of indifference to us whether our globe were a little larger or a little smaller than it is, since for so many years men lived upon it in total ignorance of its size. But there is a necessary proportion between the size and weight of the earth and the strength which God has given to our limbs and muscles. If, for example, we could be conveyed to the moon, and if it were like the earth in all respects except its size, we should there weigh five times less than we do upon the earth. We might bound up like grasshoppers to a great height in the air, but we should be so unsteady on our limbs that the hand of a child could throw us over. And if our earth, on the contrary, was as large as the planet Jupiter, all other things remaining the same, each of us should feel as if we were forced to carry the weight of eleven people as heavy as ourselves. The weight of a man of ten stone would be one hundred and twenty stone, and none of us could walk or stand upright—scarcely even move.

Ah, let us repeat what we said before: "The work of the Lord is perfect. It is always good—very good."—Prof. L. Gaussen.

THE FORD OF JABBOK.

"Wrestling Jacob" is a common expression in prayer, and an example frequently held forth in exhortation. By reason of the notion that Jacob prevailed with God by wrestling, it has come to be a common thought that God's heart must be carried by storm. Many will see in such a notion something inconsistent with the representation given of the Father by our Redeemer. God is more tender than earthly parents who know how to give good gifts to their children. The common interpretation of the scene at the Jabbok, and the lesson drawn from it, is foreign to the best conceptions of the fatherhood of God, and doubtless has wrought a good deal of mischief among God's children. It has done more than any other one thing to mold the general idea in regard to successful prayer. We do not think the common interpretation correct.

The passage in Gen. xxxii, 24–29 presents the following facts: Jacob was alone—a man came and wrestled with him—Jacob continued resistance until he was crippled by his antagonist—then Jacob prayed and received a blessing. From this account we infer: 1. That God had a specific purpose in wrestling with Jacob. We believe it was to show the conniving man his real weakness. 2. It does not appear that Jacob recognized his assailant until he was crippled by the angel Jehovah. 3. The hollow of Jacob's thigh was put out of joint for the purpose of overcoming him. "But," says some one, "it did not overcome him." We think it did. We cannot even think of Jacob in the attitude spoken of by a writer in the National Baptist, "standing on one leg, the other deprived of its strength." Jacob must have fallen to the earth in consequence of the painful character of his injury. He probably cast his arms about the limbs of his antagonist, whom he now recognizes as a celestial being, but a child could have beaten him. 4. When defeated, Jacob "wept and made supplication" (Hosea xii, 4,) and prevailed. "Let me go, for the day breaketh," says Jehovah, and Jacob answers: "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." When Jacob felt strong, he fought; when made conscious of his weakness, he prayed; when he fought, he was overcome; when he prayed, he prevailed. "For when I am weak," says Paul, "then am I strong." By crushing the worm, Jacob, God prepared him to receive the blessing reflected in the new name given him.

In proof of the common interpretation, Gen. xxxii, 28, and Hosea xii, 3, are quoted. The first reference reads thus: "And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." The best versions of the Vulgate render, "Thou hast had power with God, and how much more wilt thou prevail with men," and some of the greatest modern commentators follow this reading, though there is some difficulty in explaining the particle before "hast prevailed." Now, we contend that Jacob had power with God, but it was in prayer and after defeat. Keeping this idea in mind, and the above reading of the Vulgate solves the difficulty. In the answer to prayer, an assurance of safety from Esau was given. "If God be for us, who can be against us."

In regard to Hosea xii, 3 ("By his strength he had power with God,") we will only quote the comment of Bishop Lowth, in loc.: "The prophet alludes to those words of his, Gen. xxxii, 26, 'I will not let thee go except thou bless me;' intimating the strength and prevalency of his prayers for the obtaining a blessing from God." In our mind, Lowth has here expressed the true idea, though in his comment on the next verse he speaks of the wrestlings as a spiritual and prayerful conflict, from which we dissent. We have wondered how far the popular interpretation might be owing to certain Rabbinic traditions. One of them represents the assailant to have been Satan from whom Jacob wrested the blessing he had purchased from Esau.

From this wrestling match at the ford of the Jabbok we gather two lessons in particular. First, that the destruction of the flesh is the essential preparation of a man for God's use. Second, that the prayer of faith, expressive of the conscious want of the soul, is the prayer which prevails with God. "I will not let thee go" was not the cry of strength, but of helpless man taking hold of God by faith. God does not want us to wrestle with him. Wrestling on the part of man is expressive of doubt and works. God wrestles with us for our discipline. God would have us to believe him as a child believes its father—to trust him in the darkness as in the day. Instead, then, of wrestling as a strong man for the mastery, we should lean as a helpless child upon the affectionate bosom of our Father.—Thurwald, in Religious Herald.

SUCCESS AT LAST.

A Sabbath school teacher had taught a class of boys for years. At last his health failed him, and he must die. The thought of leaving his large class of boys unconverted, and about to enter into manhood, was more than he could bear. He told a Christian brother of his anxiety. This very wholesome advice was given: Ask the Lord to convert them, and go, while your strength remains, and tell each one of your anxiety; and pray with them, and try to lead them on; and he will surely answer your prayer. The advice was followed. A carriage was procured, and he went and found each one at his home. Again and again were the visits repeated, and one by one did the young men give their hearts to the Savior, until the day in which the faithful teacher passed to his rest he sent for the last one, who, at his dying bed, received the Savior. And then, surrounded by such a class, so blessed through his labors, he passed to the life beyond. This large class of now Christian young men stood at the dividing waters, and saw their teacher depart. They saw the magnitude and reality of the life beyond, amid the eternal years, and love as the crowning glory of that life; and then turned to bless the world with true lives and faithful labors.—The Dial.

In the General Assembly at Detroit, Rev. Dr. J. M. Jamieson closed a powerful speech on the education of ministers with these words:

"I have had some experience in educating seven sons, and I said to my boys: 'I allow you two hundred dollars a year, sink or swim, and you may work out the rest as you can.' By teaching schools, and in various ways, they have worked themselves through. I believe it does a young man good to depend upon his own resources while he is receiving his education. If you lead him to believe he is only a beneficiary, and the church is giving him all, I would not give much for him when he gets through."

A Chinese Convert's Labors.—Rev. Charles R. Mills, missionary to China, in a letter dated at "Tung Chow, May 28, 1872," makes a statement which seems to indicate that converted Chinamen will become very efficient missionaries to their countrymen.

"One of the brethren, with his wife (he says,) made a tour of a hundred miles, and baptized four men and six women, and sat down at the Lord's table with over forty Christians, all, or nearly all brought to Christ through the zealous labors of one native convert."

The Chinese Mission Work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in California is under the charge of Rev. Otis Gibson, assisted by Rev. Hu Sing Mi, one of the native missionaries, who came over, about a year since, from the Methodist Episcopal mission in China. Recently Mr. Gibson baptized ten Chinese converts in San Francisco. The mission has a steady and healthy growth.

Very Good Advice.—There is a curious Chinese proverb which says: "In a cucumber field do not stoop to tie your shoe, and under a plum tree do not wait to settle your cap on your head;" which means, if you do so some one may think you are stealing the cucumbers or the plums. Never forget that the apostle says: "Abstain from all appearance of evil."

No man ought to swear; no gentleman does it.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

One-fourth of the wealth of the Presbyterian Church is said to be in the Synod of New York.

A secret organization is operating in Ireland, France and Italy to aid the Pope in securing possession of the Papal States and regaining his temporal power.

The descendants of Rev. Jonathan Edwards have erected a monument to his memory in Stockbridge, Massachusetts. It is of red granite, and is twenty-five feet in height.

Of Course.—The Hartford chief of police says that since the new liquor law went into effect there has been a decided decrease of drunkenness and of crime in that city, and the same is reported in New Haven.

A Paris correspondent writes that Father Hyacinthe's marriage will probably be followed by that of a large number of French priests. It is stated that the average number of priests in France who marry is not less than twenty or thirty a year.

The English Wesleyans have commenced missions in Australia among the Chinese, great numbers of whom are emigrating to the Southern land of gold and diamonds. They were to dedicate a new chapel devoted to this work, in Melbourne, on July 10.

A Preacher of the Christian (Campbellite) Church says he has won one thousand persons over from other denominations, and yet has to live on half pay. Somebody suggests that he must have gotten the goats from the other churches and not the sheep.

It is said that more than half of the members of the Rock River Methodist Episcopal Conference are Masons; nevertheless, at their recent meeting a vote was carried forbidding the laying of any more Methodist church corner-stones by the liturgy of Masonry.

A Threefold Increase.—At the fifth annual commencement of the Methodist Theological Seminary at Boston, it was stated that the number of students five years ago was 32; the next year it increased to 44; the next to 59; the next to 81, and during the last year there were 94.

There are fourteen foreign missions in charge of the American Baptist Union, having in all about twenty-four thousand communicants. In addition to the hundred American laborers in these missions there are five hundred native helpers, of whom about eighty are ordained ministers.

The number of Bibles circulated from May 1, 1871, until May 1, 1872, by the British and Foreign Bible Society, was the following: In France, 250,000; Germany, 490,000; Austria, 126,000; Russia, 145,000; Egypt, Syria and Palestine, 29,000; China, 59,000; making a total of 1,099,000.

Presbyterians are moving in missionary matters. The Evangelist lately said: "Seven missionaries of our Foreign Board will sail immediately for Mexico. Two weeks hence sixteen will take their departure for India. Between May 1 and November 1 forty-seven will have gone to their respective fields. Thirty of these have never before been in the employment of the board."

The Galveston Christian Advocate states that on the twenty-fifth of August the Roman Catholic priest who officiates in the cathedral in that city, "forbid, in positive terms, all Catholic parents to send their children to a Protestant school, or to the public schools, on pain of being denied the communion so long as they continued in disobedience to this command from their spiritual superiors."

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions are just reinforcing their Bulgarian mission by sending out three additional missionaries. They are also strongly reinforcing their labors in India by adding to their number some seventeen more. Mexico is also having a place in their attention; they have recently strengthened, or will be shortly strengthening, their forces there.

Father Chidlaw, of Ohio, tells, in the Sunday School Times, of visiting a village Sunday school, where of the scholars thirty-three were girls and nine were boys; and in the State penitentiary, not long after, he found of the convicts nine hundred and ninety males and thirty females. He asks: "Who will explain these figures, and show their relation to the attendance of the sexes in the Sunday schools?"

Useful Missionary Work.—Dr. Humphrey, of the Methodist mission in India, four years ago organized a class of native Christian women for medical instruction, and now nine young women, trained by him are succeeding admirably in practice, relieving a great deal of suffering, and doing a vast amount of temporal and spiritual good. Last year over twenty thousand patients were treated at the seven dispensaries of the mission, besides several thousand visited in villages.

The Roman Catholic question which perplexes all Europe, to say nothing of the United States, has broken out in Switzerland. As we understand the matter—the reports are not very clear—the Romish Church undertook to create a new diocese and appoint a new bishop without the concurrence of the civil authorities, who have accordingly refused to sanction or even to recognize the appointment. Bismarck is teaching independence to all Europe.

One member of the Japanese embassy, now in London, has, according to Rev. Jonathan Goble, become a convert to Christianity. Mr. Goble says that he refers to the reading of the first verse of Genesis, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," which he read and discussed with him on their way from Japan to America last winter, as the beginning of the opening of his eyes to the truth.

According to the New York Observer's Year Book, the Methodists in the United States number 2,671,946; the Baptists, 2,000,000; Presbyterians, 711,046; Episcopalians, 224,995; Lutherans, 449,400; Congregationalists, 306,518. The Methodists are, therefore, of the Protestant churches, first in numbers, the Baptists second, the Presbyterians third, the Lutherans fourth, the Congregationalists fifth, and the Episcopalians sixth.

Christian Missionary Society.—The annual convention of the General Christian Missionary Society was held in Louisville, Kentucky, week before last. One hundred and fifty delegates were present from about fifteen States, besides numerous corresponding members. The president, R. M. Bishop, of Cincinnati, read the annual address, after which Rev. T. Munnel, corresponding secretary, read his report. The report of the board of managers shows about $50,000 raised for missions, and about three thousand converts gained.

Coming to the Light.—Rev. David Strang, of the United Presbyterian mission in Alexandria, Egypt, writes to the Christian Instructor that there is an increasing dissatisfaction among the Armenians there with the administration of their church property. They have long desired a reform, but the clergy resist it. In despair of effecting it, about sixty have separated themselves from the Armenian community and united with the Protestants. They now attend service in the chapel, where Elder Carabet, who speaks Turkish, preaches to them.

A recent Oriental traveler writes as follows of Egypt and Palestine: "What always impresses me more than anything else in Egypt and Palestine has been the entire absence of cheerful, exhilarating music, especially from children. You never hear them singing in the huts. I never heard a song that deserved the name in the streets or houses of Jerusalem. One heavy burden of voiceless sadness rests upon that forsaken land. The daughters of music have been brought low. 'The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth; the joy of the harp ceaseth.'"

The Augsburg Gazette announces that a new schism is declaring itself in the Catholic Church of the East. The Roman Catholic patriarch of Babylon, of the Chaldean rite, has published a protest against the papal infallibility dogma, and all his suffragans are following his example. Mousignor Andu, the patriarch, had pronounced against this innovation in the Church of the Roman Council of 1870, and a very violent scene had taken place at the time between him and the Pope. The Catholic Maronites of Syria are also separating themselves from the Church of Rome.

Boston University, the institution founded by the Methodists of the vicinity of Boston, will probably be the most richly-endowed university in the country. It is estimated that the estate left to it by the late Isaac Rich will, at the time appointed for its division, amount to $5,000,000. The law school, of which Hon. George S. Hillard is dean, opened last month with two classes, each containing at least one hundred pupils. It is the first college in the land to recognize music as a part of a collegiate course. Its department of music is under the control of Dr. E. Tourjee, as the dean of the faculty.

A New Enterprise.—The corner-stone of a Baptist chapel in Paris was laid August 20, Pastor Monod, with other French clergymen, and representatives of English and American friends of the enterprise, participating. The new building is situated in a desirable location, and is to accommodate between five and six hundred, besides a lecture and Sunday school room. The little church was formed in 1850, with only four members, and the undertaking to erect a chapel was begun nine years since, when about $7,000 was raised in England. Last year the American Missionary Union added $10,000 and purchased the site for the building in Rue de Lille.

THE GREATER BLESSEDNESS.

Paul's reference to the unrecorded words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," sets us to wishing that we knew more about them. When did Jesus utter them, to whom, and how did it happen that they were left ont of the gospels? Bnt we have them, and their application. Paul had "coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel." He must be clear in this matter, and therefore he would not receive even a "Conference suit." The elders of Ephesus must also take care not to give offense, and by their disinterested labors support rather than offend the weak. "Not yours, bnt you," is the preacher's motto. The Philippians had been just, perhaps even generons, and the reception of their bonnty is mentioned apologetically: "Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." The apostle disclaims any intention of hinting at or suggesting "a gift." In a passage where he vindicates the claims of the ministry to a support he affirms the pureness and unselfishness of his purpose: "Neither have I written these things that it should be so done unto me; for it were better for me to die than that any man should make my glorying void." The Corinthians had perhaps got up the cry that he was after the fleece. But he could score them freely: "For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? Forgive me this wrong." This was irony, or plain, sober truth, as they chose to take it. But apart from the peculiar exigencies of Paul's position, it was an inferiority in them, and a wrong in him, that they had been served for nothing.

Christ and Paul were in perfect accord on the principle that the preacher should he paid. The Master had said: "For the laborer is worthy of his hire;" and the disciple, thinking of God's care for oxen, and also of other words of Jesus than those unrecorded ones which he quotes to the Ephesian, says: "For the Scriptnres saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn; and, The laborer is worthy of his reward." The ox, ahont which the law is so solicitous, is yoked into this argument and made to do good work. The analogies are obvious. It is not meet to starve those who are enriching and feeding the world. Paul sometimes ventures to compare spiritual with carnal things even in a money point of view. His plea for a good collection for the Jewish Christians at Jerusalem was: "For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things." Here was a spiritual debt to be paid in money. In the same line of thought Paul applies the principle to the support of the ministry: "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" There is here a comparison of values. What is given in spiritual benefits infinitely exceeds what is received in temporal. How impressively does the apostle wind up a certain chapter on giving by these suggestive words: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." What are all onr gifts—the most generous and devoted—compared with his gift to us and to the world.

The translator of Lange is probably right when he gives this application to the words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" "The act of giving spiritual blessings, when compared with that of receiving temporal gain as pay, confers greater blessedness than the latter." There is a greater blessedness in giving salvation to the lost than in receiving the most munificent returns of earthly wealth.—"Freely ye have received, freely give," was Christ's injunction to his disciples. Thus interpreted, the giving is spiritual, the receiving temporal. As between what the preacher gives in spiritual benefits, and what he receives in temporal, there is hardly room for comparison. However well supported, however generously cared for, the obliged party are those who enjoy his ministrations. What might easily be wrested to countenance a stinted support of the ministry is in truth a most powerful argument for the devising of just and liberal things. It is an appeal to our sense of the surpassing benefits of the gospel, and our appreciation of what God, through the ministry, is bestowing upon us. It has a side for the preacher who labors under a feeling of neglect and injustice, and who may be tempted to think too much upon the carnal things which he is entitled to receive. His highest happiness and his absorbing motives lie in this blessedness of giving, rather than in the pecuniary return to which he has a just claim. Pay or no pay, much or little, there is a supreme blessedness in giving the gospel to the world.

It has a side as trenchant to those who are the beneficiaries of the ministry. You are receiving the priceless blessings of the gospel, and what returns are you making? How is your preacher supported, through whom the greater blessedness of gospel gifts are being poured into your heart and your homes? And, as workers for God, commissioned to give the gospel to mankind, are we remembering the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive?" In fact, it is so. Better than making money, better than accumulating, better than hoarding, or squandering upon our lusts, is this giving Christ to the heathen, and a pure gospel to the poor everywhere. But do we realize this blessedness? It is a happiness to be reached only through the crucifixion of selfishness and avarice, and by the kindling of a love which breaks forth and goes out as ardently as the Father's love in the gift of his only-begotten Son. Some adequate conception of this blessedness must be reached before Christian people will devote themselves heart and soul to the salvation of the world. They must see in it something better than pleasure, wealth or ease, and something even more imperative than life itself, before they can rise to the true spirit of the Savior's words. And the ministry must be imbued with this mind that was in Christ. It is unjust, it is mean, it is cruel that they should be defrauded. The ox ought not to be muzzled. The laborer is worthy of his reward. But whilst all this is recognized by Christ and Paul, theirs was not a trafficking, bargaining and worldly-wise temper. The blessedness of giving lost none of its sweetness, though crowned with crucifixion and martyrdom. If with us this greater blessedness must be reached through poverty and toil, it is still worth a thousand times more than it costs. It will go far to reconcile the poorest itinerant with his lot "to remember the words of our Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

GROW IN GRACE.

Grace is the favor of the Lord toward man. Growth is increase. The injunction of the apostle, then, is this: "Grow or increase in the favor of the Lord." It is this: "So live that yon may continually increase in favor with the Lord." As we would say it in ordinary conversation: "Act in such a manner that the Lord shall have a more tender regard for you to-day than he had yesterday, and a more tender regard for you to-morrow than he has to-day, and so on through life." Growth is a development from a germ or seed. Spiritnal growth is the same. The starting point in spiritual growth is regeneration—a seed or germ implanted in the heart by the Holy Spirit. It is idle to talk of growth in religion where there is no regeneration. There may be growth, but it will not be growth in grace. "Like produces like," and the man who is not born again will grow in a direction opposite to grace. This is one reason why those who have lived so long in sin find it so hard to "turn unto the Lord." They have grown in sin, become "rooted and grounded" in it, and it is almost as difficult to remove them ont of it as it is to transplant a large and flourishing tree.

Now growth depends, in some measure, upon the care and cultivation bestowed. The Savior compares his kingdom to the "earth bringing forth fruit of herself—first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Now as the "full corn in the ear" depends upon the attention bestowed upon the cultivation of the stalk, so the development of religion in the heart and life is in exact proportion to the attention bestowed upon the cultivation of the germinal principle of religion. If this is not so, then there is no pertineney in the apostle's injunction: "Grow in grace." We do not conceive of religion as a principle that lays hold of a man and compels him to attain a high degree of grace, whether he will or not. No man is religious against his own will and work. A man is religious in proportion to his will and work. A man's attainments in grace are the results of intentions put in practice. It is as true here as elsewhere that no man ever rises higher than he aims. In religion, as in ordinary pursuits, a man's acquirements show the reach of his aspirations. In religion, as in other things, the degree of a man's elevation is in exact ratio to the degree of his ambition. No one becomes eminently pious who does not intend to become eminently pious. Those who reach high elevations in piety gain only what they aim at. The gay and worldly followers of an unworldly Savior have just exactly the characters they design to have. To some this may sound harsh; but if growth in the virtues of religion depends largely upon cultivation, then it is a most solemn truth. If it does not depend upon cultivation, then why exhort Christians to "grow in grace?"

The Scriptures bring into prominence this fact: to be religious a man must work earnestly with the means with which God's love has supplied him. If he sits still and waits to be made eminently pious, using no effort himself, his growth will be slow indeed. The stirring exhortations of the divine word show that a man must he awake and alive and working in order to "grow" as he ought to "grow." These exhortations bring before the mind vivid images of bustle and stir and work and earnest power in rapid action. Religion is represented under the figure of a race-course, where the man who wants to win a prize lays aside every incumbrance in order that he may attain the greatest speed. It is represented as a sort of spiritual gladiatorship, where a man puts forth every energy in order to obtain a victory. It is represented as a perpetual conflict with evil. Can a man advance, then, if he puts forth no effort? Will not the apathetic, and those who are "at ease in Zion," go down in these conflicts? And when a man is regenerated and begins to cultivate the graces of religion, and puts all his forces to work in this matter, can there be any limit to his growth? Will he not increase and enlarge forever? Having ascended a high elevation to-day, will he not see a still higher elevation for to-morrow's work? And far beyond, will he not discover another, whose top glistens with the glory of God, and down whose sides float the encouraging songs of those who are ahead of him? Ah! reader, Christian experience has no limit, unless you can limit the benevolence of God. It is one of the grandest things of God's universe! It is progression—infinite progression.

"Approaching ever, reaching never, God,
The omnipresent, the unattainable."

ADDRESS BY BISHOP McTYEIRE ON EDUCATION.

DELIVERED AT PACIFIC METHODIST COLLEGE, OCTOBER 7, 1872.

We give the most of this able address, as reported in the Pacific Methodist:

I take the ground that the church has a distinct duty and function to educate. I take this ground because the church can do it better and cheaper than any other organization, and turn out better work. I have not been hopeful of our public school system. I beg not to be considered an enemy to popular education. The public school system may supply the need of mere intellectual training, but it omits that higher training—the culture of the moral faculties. It cannot be relied on for this last result. A public school system, however complete, when it shall have reached perfection or its ultimate tendency, will be a godless institution.

I was in New Orleans when attention was drawn to the public schools of that city. We thought it was a capital institution. In one of the higher schools the principal, Mr. Nathan, opened the exercises by a prayer, a very excellent prayer, composed by himself, to which we thought there could be no exceptions taken. But the Roman Catholics complained that the teacher opened the school with a prayer objectionable to them. They had no objection to the Lord's Prayer, but did not like Mr. Nathan's prayer. They agitated until Mr. Nathan's prayer was ruled out and the Lord's Prayer substituted. By and by the priests objected to the Lord's Prayer; they called it desecration for laymen to utter it in the classes. So the Lord's Prayer went by the board. Then the warfare began against the Bible being read in the schools. We offered to let the Douay version be read. No, the priests said, religion must be taught by the priests. And so the Bible in many places is ruled out. The warfare will go on against any moral instruction. In time the Jews, a most influential and intelligent portion of our commercial community, will object to the mention of the name of the Lord Jesus Christ in public, either directly or by implication, and they will stand on as solid ground as those who won the battle against the Bible.

No man can doubt the issue. That name which is above all names will be stricken off and eliminated from school books. The atheist will say: I don't believe in the first line in the spelling book—"No man can put off the law of God." The atheist does not believe in a God. He will say: I don't want my child to be taught about God. Then the name of God will be eliminated. The tendency of popular education to be divested of moral training will end in perfectly vicious and godless schools. It is only a question of time. What is to be done? My dear friends, we have come to the end of the question of public schools. In England the Independents, Roman Catholics and Methodists are discussing the question, and are perfectly at sea, drifting they know not whither.

Don't understand me as speaking disrespectfully of any one sect or of public schools, but I must liken public schools to soup houses in great cities. The poor are abundant, and as we don't want them to starve to death, we establish soup houses. My children and your children have bread and meat; but here is the penniless stranger, the orphan child, disappointed apprentice, belated traveler, moneyless adventurer, in want of food. We say to each: There is the soup house; go to it—sustain nature; it is free; it is a public charity. But those who want and can afford better fare will have it.

So with the public schools; for those who want no religious training, for the poor who would have no education but for these public schools, we say, go there and learn something. The evil in them we will try to correct by Sunday schools, the church and other means of grace. But for those who have higher and holier aspirations, let us provide schools which shall train the heart as well as the mind.

The Roman Catholics, though soundly abused, are wise in this; they educate their own children, and as many as they can of your children. The Episcopalians establish parochial schools, and so do the Presbyterians and Baptists. We will have to do so also. Within fifty years I prophesy that our church will have a school wherever we preach the word.

The church must take up education as a part of its economy, and only when the church takes it up can you infuse religious education into popular education.

Shall we have education without Christ, without God, without the Bible, and without prayer? That is the education you will have unless the church educates.

Sir, I believe with Fiske, Olin, Smith, Whiteman, Wadsworth, Thomas, Finley, Fitzgerald, Longfellow and Willey, that they are not out of place or sphere when they can lay their forming hands on the young minds of their generation. I believe in denominational education; not that I am a bigot. I am as free from that fault as any man; but because I want a sound, broad, enlightened and solid education, and because I want to see all the faculties, perceptions and functions educated.

In Oregon I was glad to see the church stripped for the work. It has solved the question. The Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians and the Christians, sometimes called Camphellites, are dotting the land with their schools and colleges. They are laying the foundation for energetic religious education. I have high hopes for the future of Oregon.

The church that dispenses with education will not be the church of the future. You must educate your sons for yourselves, or others will educate them for you. I will give you my experience now, though I was not at your love-feast the other morning. Among the things of my life for which I am profoundly grateful is that I enjoyed denominational education to the limited extent that I enjoyed it at all. I love my father for, and my heart glows when I think of, the pains he took to give me the inestimable advantages of religious training. When I was twelve years old he hitched up his horse and chaise or gig—a vehicle the younger part of this audience know not of, but the older part remember—and jogged with me one hundred and forty miles and put me in a Methodist institution of learning. Dr. Mitchell was the president; Jacob Nipper, tutor; Matthew Williams, professor of mathematics; and James Dannely the chaplain, the spiritual father of the concern. It was a sort of manual school, where the body and mind were both taught to labor. It was Methodist inside and outside, in the school, church and in the field, at the table and at the blackboard. How could I help being a Methodist! I thank God that that year there was a warm, old-fashioned Methodist revival. In the providence of God I was then converted. Shortly afterward my father moved to South Carolina, of blessed memory, and I returned home. I saw the old gentleman overhauling a catalogue. I knew what was coming. He hitched his horse, and the same old gig, a little more dilapidated, and hauled me eighty miles to Georgia, to a school where Dr. Thomas was master and teacher. One of the blessings I enjoyed was the benefit of his instruction and example for two years. There we had it over again; we marched to church and chapel. I heard Methodist prayers, we ate Methodist beef and bread, drank coffee, good coffee, made by a good old Methodist negro. Why, of course I was established and confirmed. I believe in that kind of confirmation. I am like the negro woman who had been a Methodist a long time. A youngster, desirous to chafe her, said: Aunty, the Bishop will be around soon; don't you want to be confirmed? Lal bless your soul, honey, she replied, I've been confirmed a hundred times. And so I've been confirmed a hundred times.

In course of time my good old father came up to commencement. The old doctor said: "I am going to Randolph Macon College; you had better send the boy with me." Times were hard, cotton only six cents per pound. The discount on money, by the time it got to Virginia, was seventeen per cent. The sacrifice and effort on the part of my father was great, but he made it. Blessings on his memory.

I was put to Randolph Macon. Drs. Ryland, Duncan and Sims were part of the faculty. There was Dr. David S. Doggett, the chaplain, and I think he preached there the best sermons I ever heard from him. Again, it was Methodism permeating everything around. I began to love it; it was there the Lord poured out his Spirit upon me and called me to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, and I went. That is my experience.

At one time all young men were turning infidels. In one State we had old Dr. Cooper, an infidel of the priestly order. He was industriously, by his learning, teaching and example, sowing quick seeds of infidelity in the minds of young men. Boys cannot think lightly of religion when the president preaches and practices it, or they see the professor of mathematics or languages bowed in prayer. Their work is the evidence of Christianity. A boy cannot speak lightly of the church whon the minds he follows and the men he worships commune at the altar. If religion is by absorption, this is a good opportunity for the work.

If the church will put her young men through such a course she will not lose them. The church must do that thing. There is a philosophy in it, economy in it, a power in it.

One word more. I don't like to see colleges come up to be indorsed. I don't like to see an institution advertised as others: "This institution is moral but not denominational." It is worse. I hold, sir, if it eliminates the denomination, the denomination should eliminate it. I believe a college can be conducted with perfect respectability without doing violence to the religions views of parents. I pursued my studies with boys of other religions beliefs, and I know they never saw anything to offend. There need be no proselyting. The aim must he to give religious aspirations and cast of mind, and this cannot be done unless it is done according to the standard ordinances and views of the church that supports it.

PACIFIC ITEMS.

The Pacific Methodist of the seventh of November furnishes the following:

LOS ANGELES CONFERENCE.—Third Session.—The Los Angeles Conference convened at Los Nietos, in the college building, October 16, 1872. The session was opened by Bishop McTyeire with appropriate religious services.

Conference adjourned on Monday, the twentieth, after a pleasant and profitable session.

LAST WEEK Bishop McTyeire announced that he had determined on a change in his list of appointments for San Francisco district: Rev. George Sim, presiding elder of San Francisco district; Rev. J. C. Simmons, preacher in charge of San Jose station. We welcome Bro. Sim to his larger pastorate. He has characteristics that promise good to the churches under his care. May God give him grace to establish and maintain. Bro. Simmons will be at home, where he is loved and respected.

THAT "old cane" with which Bishop McTyeire has so often subdued disorder and cut short windy exhortations has been compelled to hide its head. The Conference at Santa Rosa displaced it somewhat by presenting the Bishop with a beautiful cane of fine workmanship, and to complete its discomfiture Bro. J. C. Simmons last week presented the Bishop with a handy little gavel, the hammer of which was made of manzanito and the handle of California laurel. On the hammer was a plate of California silver with this inscription: "H. N. McTyeire, from J. C. S." Our Eastern brethren will hear more of that gavel.

MINNA STREET.—We are gratified to announce signs of prosperity in this charge. Several additions have been made to the membership since Conference. The Sunday school has been thoroughly reorganized, and is now in excellent working order. On the whole, the outlook is quite encouraging. The pulpit is to be filled on the tenth instant by Dr. Sargent, who will thus close his labors on the coast. The ladies of the congregation, under the supervision and with the hearty co-operation of the pastor, have enterprised a festival and fair for the purpose of raising money to pay off the church debt. All the indications are that it will be a decided success.

THE TEMPLE SINAI, a new and splendid Jewish synagogue, situated on Carondelet street, New Orleans, was dedicated with impressive ceremonies on Wednesday, the thirteenth of this month. It is a large and costly structure, arranged very much like a Christian church, has a fine organ, and the men and women sit together. The worship is to be that of Reformed Judaism—a form more moderuized than that in the older synagogues, and of a progressive and more liberal school. Rev. James K. Gutheim is the minister.

THE LADIES of the Felicity Street church are to give a sociable in the basement of the church, on the evenings of November 28 and 29, at six o'clock P. M. We are under obligations for a liberal supply of tickets. We hope a large and appreciative attendance will reward the efforts of those engaged in providing the entertainment.

ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. Editor: Much has been said and written on the subject of finance; but I will venture to offer a few thoughts on paper, which you may publish in the Advocate if you will. I believe the estimates for preachers in charge and presiding elders are generally about just, but the receipts very frequently fall below the assessments. Sometimes, and perhaps frequently, preachers in charge or presiding elders, as the case may be, purchase necessaries on time, and become involved because receipts fall so far below the assessments. It is frequently the case that preachers in charge and presiding elders are not more than half paid, while the people they serve are comparatively comfortable, and some of them living in affluence. After a just allowance has been made for poverty, it must be admitted by every informed and candid mind that this falling so far below the just estimates for and actual exponses of our preachers in charge and presiding elders is a very grave wrong, and a grievous injury to these two classes of our ministers. The stewards generally assess the weak appointments with sums so small that they can pay if they will. The stronger appointments are assessed with larger sums, according to ability to pay. The design of assessments is to make the expenses of the circuit or station equal on all, according to ability to pay.

Oh! I must tell you of my first appointment on my last round. Last Thursday, the thirty-first of October, I preached my last sermon at Ramsey's chapel for this Conference year. For the encouragement of other appointments, whether in or out of my charge, I will say that I received every dollar of my quarterage at Ramsey's chapel. May God bless the Ramsey families who honor him with their substance!

Chance for New Subscribers.—Paper Sent Till 1874 for $2.—Persons subscribing for the Christian Advocate at any time from the first of November, 1872, to the first of January, 1873, will have the paper sent to them till the first of January, 1874.

Extent of Circulation.—The New Orleans Daily Times claims that its circulation is "over double that of any other journal in the South." If the Christian Advocate be regarded as one of the "journals in the South," the Times is misinformed. Our opportunities for obtaining accurate information are equal to those of the publishers of the Times. Their circulation cannot be more than their issue. Their regular issue falls to between two and three thousand below the circulation of the Advocate, according to our information.

Caution.—Remittances should always be accompanied with instructions how to apply them. A brother sends money to Robert J. Harp, agent. It is placed to his credit on book account. The Advocate book-keeper never saw it except in the list of acknowledgments, and sends him the customary monthly statement, showing a balance against him. He writes, sarcastically perhaps: "Remitted at such and such dates." We refer to files of letters and find it even so, but that he had accounts with Book Concern and also with Advocate, and did not say on which one of them it should be credited. The amount due on one side of the house stood to his credit; on the other the discrepancy resulted from his neglecting to say "for Advocate." By giving us specific instructions our correspondents will save us much trouble.

Navra & Offner guarantee all goods as represented. No. 174 Canal street, opposite Varieties Theater.

Dr. John G. Angell, dental surgeon, has returned to the city. His residence and office are at 152 Julia street.

A. W. Skardon & Co.—We call attention to the card, in another column, of A. W. Skardon & Co., grocers, corner of Jackson and Rousseau streets.

The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of Mrs. L. Busques, branch of Mme. Demorest's fashions. Parlors, 325 Carondelet street.

The card of Joseph Patzelt, 172 Camp street, furniture and cabinetmaker, appears in this issue. We take pleasure in recommending him to our friends.

Septoline Oil Co.—The advertisement, in this issue, of the Septoline Oil Company will prove of interest to our readers removed from the convenience of gas.

J. H. Campman, 133 Poydras street, advertises, in another column, the Philanthropist and several other first-class cooking stoves; also heating stoves of all kinds.

Messrs. Everett Lane & Co., 72 Canal street, manufacturers and wholesale dealers in boots, shoes, hats and trunks, offer superior advantages to purchasers in their lines of goods.

A. Brousseau & Co.—At the well-established carpet warehouse, No. 17 Chartres street, may be found a complete stock of carpets and house-furnishing goods. See advertisement elsewhere.

W. C. Shepard & Co.—We take pleasure in referring our readers to the advertisement of the above firm, to be found among the new advertisements of this issue. They are fair, honorable, just and obliging dealers. We unhesitatingly recommend them to our friends as worthy of confidence.

Heath & Lara.—The advertisement of the above firm will be found among our new advertisements of this issue. We have found no similar establishment in the city the prices of which are more reasonable. Their stock is extensive and varied. We advise those who need anything in their line to call at 99 Camp street.

One of the most popular dry goods stores of our city is that of Messrs. Braselman & Adams, 586 and 588 Magazine street. They have always a full and well-selected stock. Their styles of prints, alpacas and other dress goods are famed for good taste and beauty, and those who give them a call are always sure of prompt and courteous attention.

Messrs. J. A. Lum & Co.—The above firm have a very large and attractive assortment of carriages, buggies and vehicles belonging to their line of trade, and enjoy a fine reputation as fair and honorable dealers, to which, we think, they are justly entitled. We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to their advertisement in another column.

We commend to our readers the advertisement of the staunch old house of Slocomb, Baldwin & Co., hardware dealers, which appears in our columns to-day. Importing direct, with ample means, and an experience handed down to them since 1822, they may justly claim to be in a position to afford all the advantages offered in any market. While they pay special attention to the wants of country merchants in the selection of their stock, they are mindful of the peculiar need of our Southern planters, and one will find in their warehouses all of the most approved implements. It will be observed, too, that with characteristic enterprise they have established a depot for railroad supplies, thus offering a near market for the roads of Texas and the Southwest.

Hams and Bacon.—Next to bread, pork in its various forms may be called the staff of life. Mr. S. H. Churchill, No. 40 Magazine street, has on hand a large supply, including sugar-cured hams at twelve and a half cents, green shoulders at eight cents, and smoked shoulders at eight cents per pound. He has also one hundred barrels of good family flour at $8 per barrel. no7 4t

BUSINESS NOTICES.

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositories, but the cases actually relieved by Price's Bitters will live

"Within the book and volume of the brain,
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such, indeed, is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters—no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh, prolific fields that Heaven sows for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it fails with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

Correct the Stomach.—It is a well ascertained physiological fact that the origin of most of the ills that afflict humanity is a deranged condition of the alimentary canal. The bowels become constipated and sluggish, and thence arises a train of painful and distressing maladies. As a preventive and cure there is no remedy so safe and sure as Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

West Point, Ga., Sept. 3, 1871.

Dr. William H. Tutt—Dear Sir: I have been an invalid for five years, and have with fortitude and patience tried nearly every patent medicine known to the people without any effectual relief. It was suggested by some of my friends to take your Vegetable Pills, for which I am under obligations for said suggestion. It being a favorable one, I propose to state the effects. I weigh more than I ever did, and my health is far better than it has been in five years. I certainly give all the credit to your Pills; and as soon as there is an increase in the family, you may bet if it is a male that his name shall be Tutt. Publish if you choose.

MADE OF KISSES.

BY A. H. POE.

"What you made of, Maggie, dear?"
Maggie turns from Rover
With the strictest reverence,
(Just her grandma ever!)
In the truest, blest eyes;
Back of sunny lashes;
While the earnest answer comes:
"Made of dust and ashes."

"What you made of, Johnnie, boy?"
Boy stands still a minute;
If there's any mischief round,
He's the one that's in it.
"I ain't dirt!" His brown eyes gleam.
And he archly reaches
Toward the basket's winy hoard;
"Guess I'm cream and peaches."

"What you made of, Taddie, pet?"
Taddie's eyes are glowing,
Two white hands push back the curls,
Two white teeth are showing;
And the smiles, they twinkle round
Like a band of blisses:
"'Cause they takes 'em, all the time,
'Spect I's made of kisses."

Little Corporal.

Legends from the Talmud.

ARRANGED FROM THE GERMAN FOR THE CHILDREN.

Very charming, says the writer, was the story of Dallas. It became so firmly impressed upon my memory that literally as my grandmother related it to me, in childhood, I can write it down now:

Once upon a time a poor man came to a house and begged for help. The master of the house and his wife were kind people, and they invited the poor stranger to the table and refreshed him with the choicest morsels. After the repast was over he asked the host if he could help him over night, whereupon the wife said to her husband:

"There is room enough in the attic to put the stranger."

So they gave the wayworn man a shelter. The couple expected that in the morning he would go his way, but they were woefully deceived. On the contrary, he came into the room and sat himself down at the table, leaving nothing upon the plate. When the meal was finished he returned to the attic-chamber which had been assigned to him. Several days—several weeks—passed away, but, instead of being considerate of the kindness which he had so long enjoyed, and taking up again his traveling staff, he came regularly to the table, ate with an ever-increasing appetite, and returned again to the little room in the attic.

The host and wife began to be alarmed at this abuse of hospitality, for they were not in very flourishing circumstances, but rather on the retrograde, having scarcely enough to provide for themselves. On that account they were so kind and tender-hearted that for a long time they could not come to a decision about informing the stranger of the fact. But at length it became impossible for them to feed this third month, and the wife said to her husband:

"Go and tell him that we would willingly keep him longer if we were in better circumstances, but that it is by no means possible for us to continue our hospitality any longer at present."

This was a hard commission for the generous man, but he summoned up his courage, went up to the attic, and, entering the little chamber, said to the occupant:

"My friend, I have faithfully and honestly performed the duties of hospitality toward you. You begged a shelter for a single night, and I have said nothing while you have remained several months, and shared my table with me. But, hard as it is, I must now tell you that I can keep you with me no longer, because I am poor myself, and my necessities are increasing every day. Go to some man of property, in the neighborhood, and he certainly will not refuse you a shelter."

The stranger, who was comfortably reclining upon his couch, raised himself slightly and answered:

"What you say is just and right. But see! My garments are so small that I can no longer appear respectably among people. Give me a better suit, and I will then beg help of others."

The man of the house reported this conversation to his wife, who observed to him:

"I think that it would be better to have some respectable clothing made for him, and let him leave the house, than to provide for him any longer."

So they sent for the tailor to come and prepare some new clothing for him, expecting that he would now take his departure from them. But not thus to dismiss himself was he, and he ate, if possible, with a greater appetite than before. The more he ate the stouter he grew, and the stouter he grew the more he ate. The honest people were now thoroughly alarmed, and the host went up again to his room and said to him:

"We have had new garments made for you, notwithstanding our limited means; now wherefore have you not departed according to your promise?"

"The tailor has spoiled the suit," was the answer. "See! It is too short and too narrow."

In fact, it was neither long enough nor wide enough. So they ordered another suit for him, which was a great deal larger and longer than the first. But as the guest, even now, made no preparations for departing they both went up to the attic chamber, where he had again sought his couch.

"We have once more," began the host, "had new clothing made for you, and yet you have not gone."

"Because these garments also are too small," rejoined the stranger.

"Look here," continued he, rising himself from the couch. "This coat scarcely reaches to the knee."

The worthy couple now perceived, to their horror, that he had grown almost to giant size, and that the clothing had become much too short and much too narrow for him.

"Who art thou?" cried both at once.

"I am Dallas!" (Want) cried the stranger, "and whoever incautiously harbors me, I leave not so easily again. I grow up quickly to be a giant, and it then requires giant strength to get rid of me again!"

The Shortest Way to Say It.

In Newport, Rhode Island, a grocer one day nailed up a salt cod on one of the shutters of his shop, and underneath it wrote in chalk:

"Codfish for sale cheap for cash here."

Presently in came an acquaintance and said:

"What do you have 'here' on that sign about codfish for? You don't sell codfish or any other goods in any place but here. Anybody would know where you sold them without that word."

"That's so," said the grocer. "Boy, wipe out the word 'here' from the codfish sign."

The boy obeyed, and the next day another critic appeared. Said he: "For cash! Who ever knew you to trust for any goods? Why do you say you sell codfish for cash?"

"You are right," said the grocer. "Boy, wipe out the words "for cash" from the codfish sign."

This was done, and shortly after a third critic came to the shop, objecting to the word "cheap."

"Who ever knew you to undersell other dealers?" said he; "you don't sell any cheaper than they. Your prices are just the same as theirs, and more, if you can get it. Cheap! cheap! what do you have that word for?"

"Well, it is not of much use," said the grocer. "Boy, wipe out the word 'cheap' from the codfish sign."

Again the boy did as his master bade, and the same day critic No. 4 found fault with the phrase "for sale." Said he: "For sale! no one ever knew you to give away codfish. Of course you keep them for sale; there is no occasion for telling people what everybody knows."

"There is something in that," said the grocer. "Boy, wipe out 'for sale' from the codfish sign."

This left the salt cod and the single word "codfish" beneath. It was but a few minutes after that a customer, who came in to buy some goods, remarked to the grocer:

"What a funny sign you've got out there! Any one would know that is a codfish nailed on your shutter."

"So they would," was the reply. "Boy, wipe out the word 'codfish' from that sign."

The boy obeyed, and the fish remained with no inscription.

Not to be Fooled.

In Philadelphia there lives a doctor so lean and attenuated that the sobriquet of "Old Bones" is far from being a misnomer.

This doctor has a student, and that student is trying his best to become a doctor. He attends to the office while the doctor attends to the out-door patients. Among other fixtures of the office is a weird skeleton, so hung and adjusted that it will walk out of the cupboard where it is kept; and, by manipulating it rightly, it can be made to go through several grotesque antics.

One day, while the student sat poring over some medical work, the street door opened, and a youthful peddler, with a basket of knicknacks, presented himself. When told that nothing in his line was wanted the little rascal began to "talk back" in a most impudent manner, and was finally ordered to leave the office.

This he refused to do, and, thinking to scare him, the student pulled a string, and open flew the door where the skeleton was hidden, and that emblem of death sprang out at the boy, who, frightened half out of his wits, dropped his basket and scampered out of the office, taking up a position on the opposite side of the street to await further events.

Just then the doctor, "Old Bones," came from his study, and, learning the cause of the uproar, he went to the door and motioned the boy to come and get his wares. "No, you don't," he called out, "I know you, if you have got your clothes on."

The Prayers of Saints.

"Mamma, God is always at home, isn't he?" said a little girl as she looked up from her sewing one morning.

"What do you mean, daughter?" asked her mother.

"Why, God is always at home, I mean, so that if we want anything he is always there to hear when we ask him. Isn't he?" she asked again, as if fearful some precious thought was in peril.

"Yes, Lily, if you mean that he is 'always at home'—that is, he is never so far away that he cannot hear the faintest wish for him that you may think in your heart; never so busy that he cannot answer your prayer, and give you all the help you need."

"But angels are not always at home, mamma!"

"What makes you think so, Lily?"

"Because, you know, somebody is always dying, and the angels have to be there."

"The Bible calls them 'ministering spirits,' and we cannot know how much they do for those who love God; but they are 'sent forth' on many kind errands, I do not doubt."

"Well, mamma, then it wouldn't be any good to pray to angels, would it?"

Can any of our little readers answer Lily's question?—Child at Home.

THE DEER—A FABLE.—From the German.—A deer once saw himself pictured in a clear brook.

"Truly," said he, "I surpass all animals in gracefulness and majesty! How lordly do my horns tower up! But my feet, how long and ugly!"

Hardly had he uttered these words when he saw a lion springing toward him. With the greatest haste his despised feet carried him to the next forest; but suddenly his broad antlers were caught in the overhanging thicket, and he could not tear himself away.

The lion overtook him and devoured him.

Learn from this not to value things for their outward appearance, but for their inner worth; otherwise you will often have to repent bitterly your unjust judgment.—What Next.

The Farm and Garden.

Banana Juice.

It is well known that the banana plant attains a vigorous growth and high degree of perfection in our Gulf States, the only drawback upon its culture as a fruit plant being the difficulty of carrying it uninjured through the winter frosts. If the juice of the stems, however, is as valuable as we are led to suppose, it might pay handsomely to cultivate the banana and plantain as annual crops, planting the roots or offsets every spring, in very rich ground, and harvesting the juice in the fall, before frost—leaving the fruit entirely out of the calculation. We see it stated in one of our exchange papers that Jamaica is exporting plantain juice. This juice is expressed from the pulpy stems of the plantain and banana trees (or plants,) which, but for late experiments on the valuable quality of the sap, would be thrown away as worthless. The fruit is not used for this purpose at all; that is gathered and enjoyed by itself as formerly; and Humboldt estimates the nutritive yield of an acre in plantains to be more than is given by potatoes or yams. The food product remains the same, and the juice of the stems, worth $100 to $200 per acre in Jamaica and Santo Domingo, may be called a clear additional profit. This plantain juice, so common, yet so long left untried and unknown, is a gummy substance capable of being turned into an article as beautiful and capable of ornamental uses as the best papier mache, at much less cost. A French gentleman who had experimented with the sap of the plantain and the fiber of the zamaica (another nearly unknown and nearly untried gift of the tropics,) states that their combination produced a splendid article for book covers. "It would be," he said, "the most exquisitely beautiful and the most durable material that had ever been produced with a reasonable regard to economy."—Our Home Journal.

More About Bones.

If convenient to an establishment that desires to buy them, it would be best, perhaps, to take them there and exchange them for some standard fertilizer; but if not, then you should make a fertilizer of them yourself. You can do it easy enough, and it will cost you not a cent, and no great amount of labor, and the article when made will be worth at least $2 per hundred pounds.

Collect the bones and break them up as well as you can with a sledge hammer or ax. Place them in a barrel sufficiently tight to hold liquids, depositing a little at a time, and mixing in with them, as you go, dried and finely pulverized swamp muck, enough to fill all the spaces between the bones, say one part of muck to four parts of bones. Cover the top with a six or eight-inch layer of muck alone, after which pour on the urine of the premises from day to day, keeping the mass moist. In from four to six weeks the bones will be entirely dissolved and ready for application to the soil.

The muck mixed in is to aid in the decomposition of the bones, and the thick mass of muck on top is to act as a deodorizer, and prevent the escape of ammonia. If there is still an escape, as shown by the smell arising, it may be stopped by throwing on a little more fresh muck.

This is an English process, the invention of Lord Pusy, who says the fertilizer so made is in every respect equal to the superphosphates made by means of such agents as acids.—Journal of Agriculture.

How to Make Toast.

A good dish of toast is a rarity, and is an enjoyment. For breakfast few things surpass it to those who are accustomed to that dish at that meal. It is light, digestible and reliable, and is not very expensive. A cup of tea or coffee, with a baked Spitzenburg, or a dish of any other sub-acid in addition, will make a satisfactory meal to a reasonable man. In toasting bread the following rules should be observed: Warm your bread well by changing the sides of the slice when heated through brown as is desired. There should be rather little than much browning, and the slices should be quite thin, say a quarter to three-eighths of an inch, no more. But do not scorch; avoid that in all cases. The philosophy in browning is to take your time until you are done. Where the toast accumulates, keep in a hot dish, but use as soon as possible. What is desirable in toast is the rich color and flavor formed by changing the starch into dextrine or gum. Heat evaporates no store in bread as well as elsewhere. The moisture that escapes from toast leaves the bread light, and soft and porous inside.

Transplanting Plants.

I recently saw an item recommending transplanting plants at night to prevent wilting. Wilting and other injuries from the hot sun are entirely overcome by my method, which is as follows: Dig a small hole in the ground, turn in some water and then some rich soil, stirring until a moderately stiff batter or mortar is formed—stiff enough for it to adhere when the plants are placed in it. Now take say a dozen plants at a time, and immerse the roots in the mixture, when, if properly done, the roots will be covered with mortar. Set the plants where they are to grow; use no water, no matter how hot the sun is, for wilting will hardly be perceptible, and none will die. Where a great many plants are to be set, the mixture may be placed in a vessel, to have it portable, as the plants should be put into the ground as fast as taken from the mortar. The object in using rich earth is two-fold: it both retains moisture and acts as a fertilizer. All kinds of plants may be set in this way. Correspondence in Western Rural.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
——, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College..... $60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department..... 40 00
Contingent expenses..... 5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.
ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

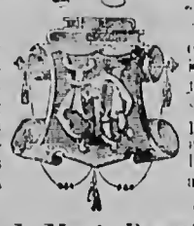
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.
PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,



An Association composed of many the several Southern States, feel the necessity for a series of purely unsectional, unpartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars of the most eminent citizens of School Books which should be unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books
Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,
By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,
By CHARLES S. VENABLE, A.L.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout

Holmes' History of the United States,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been clear and cold, with ice in exposed localities. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. Picking appears to have been completed in most localities. The freeze, however, is reported to have done serious injury to the cane, which may materially curtail the yield should the present cold be followed by a warm spell.

The river is 14 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	17,604
Lake.....	150
Mobile.....	2,508
Texas.....	218
Total.....	20,480

On Saturday the demand was fair, and, although the movement was checked by moderate supplies, especially of the better qualities, yet the sales summed up 4,700 bales, at stiffer prices, the higher grades, and in fact all good staple, clean and bright-colored cottons, showing an advance of ⅛c., strict good ordinary closing at 17¾@17⅞c., against 17⅝@17¾c. on Friday, middling at 18⅜@18⅝c., and good middling at 19⅝@19¾c. On Monday the movement was more active and at still stiffer prices, the ruling rates during the morning showing an improvement of ⅛c., and subsequently of ⅛@¼c., closing at ¼c. The sales summed up 7,650 bales. The upward movement was stimulated by a firm market at New York, an improvement of 1-16d. at Liverpool, an advance in both foreign and domestic exchange, and the supply being only moderate, while there was considerable competition among buyers. On Tuesday the market opened with a good demand, and, although operations were restricted by light supplies of the better qualities, yet a fair business was done during the morning, but at irregular prices, a part of the sales showing no improvement and the rest an advance of ⅛c. Later in the day the demand became still more active, while prices continued to rule in favor of factors, the bulk of the business showing an improvement of ⅛c., and some transactions ¼c. The sales summed up 5,850 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 253,991 bales, against 176,912 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 230,270 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 684 to Great Britain, and an increase of 56,516 to France, and of 54,656 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary.....	16¾ @ 17
Good ordinary.....	17¾ @ 18
Low middling.....	18⅝ @ 18⅞
Middling.....	19⅜ @ 19⅝
Strict middling.....	19⅝ @ 19⅞

CORN.—On Tuesday the market was in good supply with a moderate demand, and 2,500 sacks were sold, in lots, at 65@66c. for mixed and yellow, and 64@65c. ₱ bushel for white, the inside figures showing a decline of 1c. on mixed and 2c. on white.

OATS.—On Tuesday the sales were confined to 1,000 sacks choice St. Louis, in lots, at 14@15c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the market was in moderate supply and dull. The sales were confined to 200 sacks, in lots, at $1.05 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Monday the sales embraced 753 bbls. mess, in four lots, at $16.25@16.50 ₱ bbl. for old. Some new sold on private terms, said to be $15, and some old at $15.50 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $16.50@17 ₱ bbl. for old.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was very much depressed, with shoulders offering at 6c., clear rib sides 11½c., clear sides 11⅞@12c. ₱ lb. 20 and 13 casks shoulders sold on private terms, and 15 casks clear sides at 12c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—On Tuesday 20 tierces new sugar-cured sold at 17½@17½c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—The market has continued dull. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 100 kegs refined, in several lots, at 10½c. ₱ lb., and 44 tierces kettle-rendered on private terms. Tierce is quoted at 8¾@9c. for choice packers' and refined, and kegs at 10@10½c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT—Is very dull. On Monday a lot of 16 casks shoulders sold at the Jackson railroad depot at 6c., 10 casks on the spot at 6¼c. ₱ lb.

CORN MEAL.—On Tuesday 350 bbls. sold, in several lots, on the landing, at $2.80, 2.85, 2.90@3 ₱ bbl.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The market is quiet but firmer. Western is quoted at 11@11½c. ₱ lb., Northern 12@12½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113¾@114 (against 113⅛ at New York,) and closed at 113⅝@113⅞ (against 113⅜ at New York.)

In silver we have noticed only retail sales, including $500 on Saturday at 110½. American half dollars are quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars nominal.

MEDICAL.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

As an Invigorator, Liver Corrector and Blood Renovator is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use. It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dissels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or overtaxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a fluid and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is permanent and lasting.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM,

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the Relief of Consumptive Patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Distress which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the spitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

Treat the Human Machine Gently.

The winding passage, thirty feet in length, through which the main portion of the waste matter of the system is discharged, is lined with a membrane as delicate as silk, and as sensitive as a net-work of nerves can make it. Neither constipation, colic, diarrhœa, dysentery or any other bowel complaint can be cured by abusing and convulsing this tender membrane with a furious purgative. The best and safest remedy in such cases is that mild balsamic and delightful tonic laxative,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient,

which heals, tones and invigorates the irritated intestines, while it relieves them from the morbid humors which provoke abdominal disease. Sold by all druggists. oc31 4t

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S.

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "A ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mucus, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract, and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the receiving power is impeded. This is what causes the blood-streaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Cleans and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1872. NO. 48.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 20.—A European letter to the Herald cautions American inventors to acquaint themselves thoroughly with the patent laws of Austria before sending their inventions to the great exposition at Vienna.

A Roumanian emigration society was formed here last evening to welcome and care for the emigrants now en route to America from Roumania, some five hundred in number.

The Tribune says the health of Mr. Greeley is much impaired by the death of his wife, but it is believed his strong constitution will soon enable him to overcome his illness.

Boston, Nov. 20.—Among the periodicals destroyed was the December number of Old and New. One number of Littell's Living Age was entirely destroyed, and between sixty and seventy thousand copies of Well-Spring, semi-monthly.

Denver, Nov. 20.—Stanton, the man with the $250,000 ruby, arrived here from Arizona last night, and freely exhibited the gem, which is very beautiful, though jewelers are in doubt as to its being anything more than a garnet. He also shows what he calls a $1,000 diamond.

New York, Nov. 21.—Only two thousand hogsheads tobacco were burned in Jersey City last night. Latest estimates place the loss at about $600,000. The immense six-story warehouse adjoining, containing fully five thousand hogsheads, was saved.

The Times states that General McClellan, president of the Atlantic and Great Western railroad, has seized the hooke of the manager at Meadville, Pennsylvania, showing persistent stealing. The manager disgorged $75,000 and resigned.

Memphis, Nov. 24.—The horse disease is increasing rapidly. All the stables are closed, and but a few horses are on the streets. All of the fire department horses are affected. The water pipes, recently laid down, were filled last night to be used if necessary.

Selma, Nov. 25.—The horse disease is prevailing here. There are now fifty cases under treatment. It is in a very mild form.

Washington, Nov. 25.—General McDowell succeeds General Meade as major general, and will be assigned to command the Department of the South, with headquarters at Louisville.

General Hancock will command the Atlantic division, vacated by Meade's death.

General Terry succeeds Hancock in command of the Department of Dakota.

Paymaster Hodge, convicted by court martial of embezzling nearly $500,000, and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, has been pardoned. Facts seem to show that he was trapped into the defalcation.

FOREIGN.

London, Nov. 21.—Information has been received in London that the bark Samuel Larrabee, which sailed from Savannah on the ninth of January last for Bremen, and the bark Lancrcoet, which left Baltimore on the nineteenth of February last for Belfast, were lost at sea, and every person on board the two vessels perished.

Berlin, Nov. 21.—The ecclesiastical right bill, prohibiting the issue of decrees of excommunication, has been submitted to the Diet. It declares that any clergyman who shall by name threaten punishment, or decree or proclaim as punishable a subject of Prussia, shall be liable to a fine of one thousand thalers or two years' imprisonment, and be ineligible to hold office for the term of five years.

Rome, Nov. 21.—A bill for the suppression of religious corporations has been introduced in the Chamber of Deputies.

Rome, Nov. 22.—Emigration from Italy to the United States has increased to such an extent that the attention of the government has been called to it.

London, Nov. 23.—Sir John Bowring, politician and author, and formerly editor of the Westminster Review, member of Parliament and British minister to China, is dead.

London, Nov. 24.—A bulletin from the royal palace at Madrid, dated last night, announces the condition of the King as gradually improving.

London, Nov. 25.—The Tontic and Colorado, and the British steamship Breton, with a promise of support from the Khedive of Egypt, form the expedition against the slave trade at Zanzibar. The Khedive proposes to anticipate the expedition by seizing the lake region of the Nile.

Eliza Cook, the English poetess, is very ill. Her recovery is regarded as impossible.

London, Nov. 26.—The Khedive's expedition consists of five thousand men, and is commanded by Pendry Bey, an American. It goes to Zanzibar in transports, with the ostensible intention of joining Dr. Livingstone and of co-operating with him, if agreeable; otherwise to act independently in solving the problem of the sources of the Nile under Egyptian colors.

The Marquis of Londonderry is dead.

PROCLAMATION.

State of Louisiana,
Executive Department,
New Orleans, November 21, 1872.

Whereas, The present condition of public affairs presenting an extraordinary occasion, I do hereby, by virtue of the power in me vested by the constitution and the laws enacted thereunder, convene the General Assembly, elected on the fourth day of November, A. D. 1872, in extra session, for the period of ten days.

Senators and representatives of the General Assembly elected on the fourth day of November, A. D. 1872, and the Senators holding over, are therefore summoned to meet in their respective chambers at the Mechanics' Institute, now used as a State house, in the city of New Orleans, at twelve o'clock noon, on Monday, the ninth day of December, A. D. 1872.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the State to be affixed, at the city of New Orleans, this twenty-first day of November, A. D. 1872, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.
Y. A. Woodward,
Assistant Secretary of State.

BODILY INDOLENCE.

If a man indulges habits of bodily indolence, the natural powers of the constitution are impaired; and exertion becomes, every year, he lives, more and more irksome. This wretched condition is, however, so painful in itself, so injurious to worldly interests, and so disgraceful, that it is comparatively but a few individuals who suffer themselves to sink into it. But the indolence of the mind is less apparent than the indolence of the body; and those who are the most subject to it may scarcely themselves be aware of their real condition. Persons may converse as they hear others converse, and do what they see others do; they may repeat what has been fixed in the memory, and believe what they have been taught, or what best pleases their particular tempers; while their minds may be as completely inactive, and as incapable of exertion, as the body is during sleep. This is certainly a very degraded state for a being whose mind is, by nature, capable of much more activity than his body; but yet there is reason to believe that the minds of a greater part of mankind are in this inactive state.

It is owing, in a great measure, to this prevailing and habitual indolence that millions of men, from one generation to another, continue to be deluded by childish and wicked superstitions. It is owing to this mental indolence in the mass of mankind, that one man, whose mind is active, often finds it easy to persuade thousands to receive some fanciful opinions of his own, or to induce them to follow him in absurd and mischievous enterprises, which bring miseries upon themselves and their neighbors. It is in part owing to this torpid indolence of the mind that men, who have heard that there is a future life, which will be happy or wretched according to their conduct and the state of their minds in this present life, yet make themselves tranquil while they neglect the means of acquiring happiness in the life to come.—Elements of Thought.

Sammy and his father meeting the teacher of the school, Sammy performed the ceremony of introduction. "Mr. S.," said he, "this is a father of mine."

A Good Example is one of the loudest bells to toll people to church.

Christian graces, like the stars, shine brightest in the darkest hour.

The duty of the happy is to help the suffering to bear their woe.

FROM THE WORK.

Crystal Springs, Mississippi.—Mr. Editor: By request I would notice our meeting at Caseyville, which lasted about twenty days, under the charge of Bro. A. B. Nicholson. The result of the meeting at Caseyville was about twenty conversions, a goodly number of accessions to the church, and a general upbuilding of the church. Many in that vicinity are praising God for his goodness.

At Georgetown, on the Georgetown circuit, under the charge of Bro. Day, we had a precious time. The meeting lasted about six days. Several accessions to the church, some conversions and the church greatly blessed.

B. T. Pearson.

Bellevue and Kimball Chapel, Opelousas Dist., Louisiana Conference.—Mr. Editor: The last quarterly meeting on this work was held at Kimball chapel on the second and third of November. The Lord was there and did a great work. On Saturday night his presence was realized. Many were made to rejoice in hope of the immortal crown. Penitents were converted, and sinners were made to fear and tremble. On Sunday we had a glorious time indeed—the most signal exhibition of converting power I ever witnessed. There were fifteen or twenty penitents at the altar. All of them were seemingly converted simultaneously. We protracted the meeting, and on Monday were reinforced by Bro. Hollister, of Abbeville, who preached for us with power and acceptability. We closed the meeting with the following results: the church much revived, a number of backsliders reclaimed, twenty or more professed conversion, and sixteen were added to the church.

GREEN FARM, ALABAMA.

Mr. Editor: There is not much in the country to inspire thought, but a great deal to excite the emotions. Nature in her ever-varying forms, yet the same in spirit yesterday, to-day and forever, is a familiar presence, and you have silent communion with her in all her moods. Who that lives in town can tell the last time it rained? But we of the country know well the week and the day of the week from one shower till another. It has been just three weeks, lacking one day, since we were visited with a "season." The ground had become dry and parched, the plow had stopped, the seed were lying in the dusty soil without power to germinate, and we were praying for rain. This morning, awakening before day, the pleasing sound of raindrops pattering on the roof saluted our ears, and we involuntarily exclaimed: "Thank God!" Too many pleasant emotions were excited to permit us to sleep, and we arose to write this letter.

Already the hectic flush of autumn has passed upon the woods, and the vegetable world has received its yearly summons to death. The sumac and the black gum have put on robes of scarlet, the chestnut flaunts its yellow drapery, and the "maple burns itself away." The death-fires are kindling too in the more solid foliage of the oak tribe, and the party-colored flames are licking the tips of the leaves throughout all the forest. "Thou changest their countenance and sendest them away!" O the magnificence of death! What robes are so gorgeous as our dying robes! What point in life so important as the point of departure! Ah, well have we lived when we can die thus!

"Surely he will not long delay;
I hear his Spirit cry:
Arise, my love, make haste away,
Go, get thee up and die!"

The Conference year is drawing to a close and the reapers are binding up their sheaves. In many cases the increase has been manifold. Our own circuit and neighborhood have been blessed. Two new camp grounds and one new church have been dedicated on the Elyton circuit. A new station has sprung up at Birmingham, where a population of three thousand or more has gathered since last Conference. Next year will probably work still greater changes in the coal and iron region of Alabama.

"Mr. James, how do you keep your books?" "Oh, by double entry." "Double entry—how's that?" "Easy enough; I make one entry and father makes another."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Life of John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A. By John Eadie, D. D., LL. D. Revised by Atticus G. Haygood, D. D., Sunday school secretary. Nashville, Tennessee: Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the Methodist E. Church South. 1872.

The most of our readers are familiar with the name of John Kitto. His Daily Bible Illustrations and his Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature are well known and appreciated. His was a rarely noble life—a life of affliction, of triumph over the most formidable obstacles, and of great and useful achievements. His character was of the lovable and purest, most simple and unselfish, and of a type of piety as attractive as it was strong and uncompromising. The Life of Kitto is entertaining and instructive in the highest degree, and is one of the most valuable biographies of which we have any knowledge. Dr. Haygood has done a little abridging, but in the main the work is as it came from the hand of the author. We are glad to welcome an edition from our own Publishing House, and we heartily commend the book to our readers. It is a handsome duodecimo of 424 pages, bound in cloth, paper and type good. For sale at Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Thoughts for the Times. Sermons by the Rev. H. R. Haweis, M. A. New York: Holt & Williams. 1872. 347 pages, 12mo.

The author belongs to what are called "the liberal clergy" of the English Church—a representative of the "broad church," as distinguished from "the high" and "the low." He reminds us of F. W. Robertson, but lacks his earnest spirituality. There is a great deal in these sermons to command attention, much that is practical and suggestive, and the style is direct, terse, clear and finished. There are, however, sown through them all mischievous tares—errors both germinal and developed—which may lead to harm, and they are likely to be all the more damaging from the fact that they are stated in connection with the most important and convincing truths. The work possesses a peculiar interest as the expression of a type of theology which largely leavens the English Church, and is more or less diffused in the world of modern thought. We have received our copy through Kain & Co., New Orleans.

Present Issues, or Facts Observable in the Consciousness of the Age. By Rev. Robert Withers Memminger. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 1873.

To give some idea of the scope and subject matter of the book we give the titles of the several chapters: The Church as an Establishment Essentially Human; Sacerdotalism; Christianity and Æsthetics, or the Christian Cultus; The Pulpit—its Relation to Society and its Duty; Universalism and Calvinism; Civilization and Devil-Worship; Conclusion. Mr Memminger is a clear thinker and expresses himself clearly. His themes are deep, and embrace the profoundest questions of theology, social science and history, but he is not hard to understand, and to us he is a most suggestive and agreeable writer. In searching through his chapters we find some matters for dissent, but in the main his views meet our hearty approbation. The book is well worth reading. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

Secrets of the Convent and Confessional. By Mrs. Julia McNair Wright. With an introduction by Rev. Daniel March, D. D. National Publishing Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Memphis, Tennessee. Jones Bros. & Co., Chicago, Illinois. 1872. Octavo, 622 pages.

In the attractive garb of a well-told story this book exposes those institutions of popery, the convent and the confessional, in their most secret workings and influences. We do not think the picture is overdrawn, nor is it wanting in fidelity to truth and facts. It is indorsed by Dr. March and others of high repute, and is represented to us by those who have read it as a work of merit. The subject is one with which the author is perfectly familiar, and her representations are entitled to the most thoughtful and serious attention.

English Literature Considered as an Interpreter of English History. Designed as a Manual of Instruction. By Henry Coppee, LL. D. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 1873.

A splendid volume of 488 pages, substantially bound, and a triumph of typographical art. The work contains mention of all the English authors of any note, with biographical sketches and quotations, from the earliest times down to the present day. The historical features of literature are specially copious and satisfactory, and the great authors are placed in immediate relation with great historical events. As a book for reference it is of special value, and will prove a decided addition to the library. Gresham, New Orleans.

A Biblical Cyclopedia, or Dictionary, Illustrative of the Old and New Testaments. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL. D. With maps and pictorial illustrations. Thirteenth edition, revised throughout. London: Charles Griffin & Co., Stationers' Hall Court. 1872. 690 pages, octavo.

The first edition of this book was published in 1848, and twenty-four thousand copies were sold. In the recent revisal three hundred new articles, with numerous additional cuts, have been inserted. It is strictly a biblical cyclopedia, and free from sectarian matter. All the discoveries of modern travel, research and learning are utilized in this revised edition. The plan of the work is much the same as Watson's Bible Dictionary, and will be found a most valuable work of reference. For sale by R. J. Harp, Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Some Elements of Religion. Lent Lectures, 1870. By H. P. Liddon, D. D. Rivington's: London, Oxford and Cambridge. 1872.

Everything that has appeared from the learned canon of St. Paul is worthy of the attention of all intelligent and devout readers. These lectures are upon important and practical subjects, and are in Mr. Liddon's usual style of clear and earnest thought. The subjects of the lectures are: The Idea of Religion; God, the Object of Religion; The Subject of Religion—the Soul; The Obstacle to Religion—Sin; Prayer, the Characteristic Action of Religion; The Mediator, the Guarantee of Religious Life. For sale by R. J. Harp, Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

The World of Anecdote. An Accumulation of Facts, Incidents and Illustrations, Historical and Biographical, from Books and Times Recent and Remote. By Edwin Paxton Hood. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1872.

The world of anecdote it is, being no less than 700 octavo pages. We believe Mr. Hood is one of Spurgeon's preachers. His "Lamps, Pitchers and Trumpets" was a pretty good thing, and "The World of Anecdote" seems to be a very good collection of what is afloat in this line. Things vulgar and profane have been excluded, and the work will entertain and instruct the most fastidious. From the publishers, through J. A. Gresham, New Orleans.

Lectures on the Nature of Spirit, and of Man as a Spiritual Being. By Chauncey Giles. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1873.

Mr. Giles is a minister of the New Jerusalem Church, and discourses of death, the resurrection, the final judgment and the nature of the future life after the manner of his sect. There is some truth, of course, but presented in connection with many unscriptural absurdities. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

Light on Last Things. By William Hayden. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1873.

The title of this book is a misnomer. In our judgment the author darkens counsel by words without knowledge. He throws no light upon anything, either first or last. The book seems to be written by a Swedenborgian, and the doctrine of the future life, final judgment and the end of the world are expounded from this point of view. Gresham, New Orleans.

Dolly's Resolutions, on Letters from Abroad. By Hanna-Maria. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 1873.

A very beautiful volume, containing things humorous, lively, religious and instructive. A book for young people, and one that we think will entertain and benefit them. From Gresham, New Orleans.

Off the Skellios. A Novel. By Jean Ingelow. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1872. Kain & Co., New Orleans.

Miss Ingelow is a poet of rare genius. If her prose is as good as her poetry it will not lack appreciative readers.

Mr. Stanley's eagerly-expected work, How I Found Livingstone, is now so far advanced that Messrs. Scribner, Armstrong & Co., of New York, are able to promise its publication about the middle of November. How I Found Livingstone is a complete and consecutive narrative of Mr. Stanley's notable exploit, and has been entirely rewritten by him for this book. It includes a large number of thrilling incidents never before published, and is the only record of his adventures which is published under his sanction and authority. All other works purporting to describe Mr. Stanley's search after Livingstone are mere compilations from the newspapers, etc., and are issued in direct conflict with Mr. Stanley's interests.

John E. Potter & Co., Philadelphia, have in press and will shortly publish "Potter's Complete Bible Encyclopedia"—a universal dictionary of biblical, ecclesiastical and historical information, from the earliest times to the present day—by Rev. William Blackwood, D. D., LL. D., author of "Blackwood's Comprehensive Aids to the Study of the Holy Bible," etc., with valuable contributions by other eminent divines, comprised in about two thousand brevier pages, quarto, with nearly three thousand illustrative engravings.

The Independent Child's Speller, by J. Madison Watson—A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, publishers—commends itself to our judgment as an excellent thing. The text is in script, designed to be copied by the child, thus learning at once to write and spell.

Littell's Living Age of November 9 has: The Higher Ministry of Nature; On Prayer, by Prof. Tyndall and President McCosh; France and the Emperor; A New Theory of Volcanoes, and other articles.

Numbers Four and Five of a Cyclopedia of the Best Thoughts of Charles Dickens, published by E. J. Hale & Son, New York, have been received.

Of Educational Magazines received this month are Morton's Monthly Home and School, and the National Teacher.

Le Bon Ton for November has a splendid array of colored fashion plates, and patterns of great value to the ladies.

Appleton's Journal of November 23 is an unusually fine number, profusely illustrated.

The Rural Alabamian for November has been received. An excellent number.

GOD MADE ALL THINGS.

BY J. MONTGOMERY.

Sun, moon and stars, by day and night,
At God's commandment give us light;
And when we awake and while we sleep
Their watch like guard an angels keep.

The bright blue sky above our head,
The soft green earth on which we tread,
The ocean rolling round the land,
Were made by God's almighty hand.

Sweet flowers that hill and dale adorn,
Fair fruit trees, fields of grass and corn,
The clouds that rise, the showers that fall,
The winds that blow—God sends them all.

The beasts that graze, with downward eye,
The birds that perch and sing and fly,
The fishes swimming in the sea,
God's creatures are, as well as we.

But us he formed for better things—
As servants of the King of kings,
With lifted hands and open face,
And thankful heart to seek his grace.

SUPERANNUATES AND QUARTERLY CONFERENCES.

Mr. Editor: I owe Bro. Montgomery an apology for saying, in my reply to him, that I did not recollect him as a member of Bishop Earley's council at the Brandon Conference, held late in November, 1857. I knew that he was presiding elder for one year, about that time, and, by mistake, referred to the wrong copy of the Minutes, which led me to fix the time the year after. Before I detected the mistake my communication was beyond my reach. As to Bishop Esrley's opinion, said to be given in his council chamber, it had none of the attributes of an official and governing decision, as I expect to show hereafter. I still do not recollect it as embracing superannates—only professors, agents, etc. As to the words "and none else," used in the Discipline in reference to the composition of a Quarterly Conference, I believe they were put there only to exclude unofficial persons and visiting brethren from other charges, and confine the membership to the officials of that one charge. If they were intended to exclude superannuates, it is passing strange that it has taken more than sixty years to find it out. The Discipline of 1808, now before me, shows that these three little words, "and none else," were then just where they have been in every edition from that to the present date.

Bro. Shanks' article would make the impression that I used language in my article on Common Law, in reference to Bishop Pierce's decision, which I would consider somewhat disrespectful—such as "illegal," "condemns it as illegal," etc. I used only mild and respectful language when speaking of the Bishop's decision. My motto is: "Soft words and solid arguments."

Bro. Shanks would also make the impression that I wrote the article on Common Law solely or mainly for the purpose of arraigning and condemning Bishop Pierce's decision. This was not the case. I wrote the article for its own sake, in order to show the existence and uses of common law, and for illustration I gave three instances in which I thought its authority had not been properly admitted. In the first and third illustrations I gave no names, because those opinions had not been published authoritatively; but Bishop Pierce's decision at the Alabama Conference, excluding superannuates from Quarterly Conferences, was immediately published—I think contrary to the positive law of the church (see Discipline, page 64,) and was being extensively quoted as authoritative; whereas, if it yet has the authority of law, it is more than those outside of the College of Bishops know. I will now notice briefly Bro. Shanks' logic by which he excludes superannuates from Quarterly Conferences. I think, upon reflection, he will find his premise too broad, and leading to consequences he did not anticipate. In answer to the question, "Who shall compose the Quarterly Conference?" he very properly answers, "All the traveling and local preachers," etc.; but then he jumps to the conclusion that superannuated preachers are not traveling preachers; therefore they are "barred out" of the Quarterly Conferences by express statutory law. Let us see where this sort of logic will lead us to. The Discipline says the Annual Conferences shall be composed of "all the traveling preachers in full connection," etc.; but, according to Bro. Shanks' premise, a superannuate is not a traveling preacher, and consequently not a member of the Annual Conference. Again, the Discipline says a District Conference shall be composed "of all the preachers in the district, both traveling and local," etc. But, according to Bro. Shanks' decision that a superannuate is not a traveling preacher, he is "barred out" of the District Conferences. Once more: in regard to Church Conferences the Discipline provides that they shall be composed of "all the members of the church, and resident members of the Annual Conference," etc. But, according to Bro. Shanks' logic, a superannuate is not a traveling preacher, consequently not a "resident member" of an Annual Conference, so that he is "barred out" from the privilege of sitting as a member in a Church Conference where his wife and children hold their membership. I am aware of that wise provision of the Discipline, on page 84, in reference to the trial, acquittal, suspension or expulsion of a superannuated preacher, where something is said of the Conference of which he is a member. But Bro. Shanks decides that a superannuate is not a traveling preacher; so that his membership in an Annual Conference must, somehow, be different from that of the recognized traveling preachers. It would seem that the Annual Conference merely gives him a nominal membership for the purpose of trying, acquitting, suspending or expelling him in case such things have to be done. His being a beneficiary of the Annual Conference does not of itself make him a member, for certain women and children are beneficiaries, but are not members. I confess that I had always supposed that superannuated preachers were classed with the traveling preachers, but, according to Bro. Shanks, I have been mistaken. He does not class them either with the traveling or local preachers. According to his understanding of the law of the church, they are sui generis—a sort of non-descript—and his logic, legitimately carried out, would come near "barring them out" of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Men of Israel, help! Hold, Bro. Shanks! I know you intend nothing of this sort. You would not disfranchise and unchurch such an intelligent, pious and heretofore laborious and useful class of men as now compose our superannuated corps. In conclusion Bro. Shanks opens a formidable battery upon me, consisting of two Bishops, three General Conferences and Bro. Montgomery; but somehow it has failed to make much impression. As to what constitutes the legality and authority of a Bishop's decision of a mooted question, please see our late Discipline, pages 64 and 65. The decision must be given in open Conference, in answer to a specific written question; but "no episcopal decision shall be authoritative excepting the case pending, nor shall any such be published until it shall have been approved by the College of Bishops." Please read the whole law and you will see that neither Bishop Earley's or Bishop Pierce's decision yet have the essential attributes of authoritative law. As to the three General Conferences, or any number of General Conferences, I have yet to learn that they have ever passed any law to exclude superannuated preachers from Quarterly or any other Conference of the church. When the brethren find any such authoritative law they will confer a favor on one who desires to know the law by referring me to the book and page where it is to be found. The object I had in view when I wrote the article on Common Law having been fully accomplished, I have nothing further to say on the subject, and desire to close with this communication. I presume that no one will censure me for having the warmest love and greatest respect for those worn-out soldiers of the cross, whose well-directed and faithful labors in former years have largely contributed to the present greatness and prosperity of our beloved church.

In love with all the brethren,

J. G. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., Nov. 4, 1872.

THE "DENOMINATIONS" IN A BAD WAY.

Mr. Editor: In my pastoral rounds I have gotten hold of a small tract, from which I wish to make a few extracts. It bears the imprint of the American Baptist Home Mission Rooms, New York, and is entitled "One who would do his Duty, and How to be Saved." That "One" is Christ, and the "duty" made prominent is his seeking baptism at the hands of John. Of course John immersed him—according to the tract. The pivot upon which the discourse turns is the reason Christ urged for his baptisms: "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." What a pity the writer did not read these words in connection with Exodus xxix, 4; xl, 12; Leviticus viii, 1–13. He would have understood the word "righteousness" in this connection. A little reading often saves one from great inconsistencies.

In answer to the question, "Was he (Christ,) or was he not, a Baptist?" we have the following: "The minister who baptized him was a Baptist; and if going to and into a river with a Baptist minister, and there being immersed" (that he was immersed is taken for granted—no proof) "by him in a religious way, constitutes one a Baptist, we cannot divest ourselves of a conviction or belief that 'the man Christ Jesus,' in going to the river Jordan, where John was baptizing, and being himself baptized, did become a Baptist. * * * From the day he was baptized by a Baptist minister he lived in fellowship with baptized disciples; communed with them and with no others; was with them when betrayed; was their leader when crucified; is their Lord now in glory." In reference to Christ's regal state we have the following: "The whole universe of matter and mind is now subject to One who was once at the river-side asking baptism, and in the river receiving baptism, at the hands of a Baptist minister. There is and ever will be, on the throne of the universe, a Baptist, * * * and before him all denominations and all nations will be brought to answer for the deeds done in the body. * * * Then the enemies of Baptists, and of the ordinance by which they are distinguished, will be speechless." The capitals and italics are the author's.

Not to discuss the mode of baptism, I wish to make a few remarks on these quotations.

1. This tract is circulated by a Baptist preacher of wide reputation in his denomination, having edited one of their leading papers—one who professes unusual catholicity toward other denominations, calling them his dear brethren, and expresses a hope that a better day will soon dawn, when the terms of communion will be so broadened that he and they can sit down together at the Lord's table.

2. This dear brother, and the society that sends forth this missile of sectarian warfare, either believe that Christ was regularly inducted into the Baptist Church by John, and that the consequences claimed in this tract hence follow, or they do not. If they do, then are they as exclusive and bigoted in their theory of the church of Christ as Pio Nono, and all their show of fraternity for other professing Christians is mere sham. If they do not, then are they circulating, for sectarian purposes, what they know to be a tissue of sophisms, on the theory that "the end justifies the means." In the one case we have the spirit of popery as rank as that pervading the Vatican; in the other Jesuitism as palpable as that inaugurated by Ignatius Loyola.

3. If Christ was inducted into the Baptist Church by John, the following are some of the logical consequences:

First. He was either baptized in the name of the Holy Trinity—Father, Son and Holy Ghost—which no one, we presume, is bigoted enough to affirm—or the name of the Trinity is not of the essence of the rite. If the latter, Christ mistook when he gave the great commission—Matthew xxviii, 19. But the tract puts it broad enough to cover a dipping in connection with any formula of words, or as expressive of any religious idea—"immersed by him in a religious way." Any "religious way" will do, so a Baptist does the immersing.

Second. Christ, as a member of the Baptist Church, cannot be its Founder; and as he was brought into it by another, he cannot be its Head. In the nature of things, John is entitled to these distinctions. Hence the Baptist Church is the church of John, and can be the church of Christ only in the sense in which it is the church of J. S. B., the writer of this tract—that is, as both are members of it. John's was a dispensation of rites and ceremonies. Does this account for the emphasis laid upon immersion by the Baptist Church?

Third. After Christ had been regularly inducted into the Baptist Church he took "a new departure," and established a church of his own, leaving John "beyond Jordan at Bethabara, where there was much water." "Upon this rock will I build my church." "Other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Hence, on this theory, there have existed two churches since the days of John and Christ—the Baptist Church and the Christian Church. The former must rest upon John, for Christ could not be a member, in common with myriads of others, and be its foundation at the same time. The absurdity is too glaring to deceive a child. But he is the "foundation"—not a member—of the Christian Church. In this view, if John did immerse—which we by no means grant—we Christians have no more to do with his modes than with his leathern girdle and food of locusts and wild honey. Christ has defined the modal meaning of the term baptize for his church. Compare Acts i, 5 and ii, 1–18. So Philip led the eunuch to understand the nature and mode of baptism by expounding a prophecy to him, in which are found these words: "So shall he sprinkle many nations." Compare Acts viii, 32–40 with Isaiah lii, 13 to close of fifty-third chapter. The reader will see that the prophecy is segregated by the modern division into chapters.

Fourth. The assumption of a modal succession of Baptist ordinances, about which we hear so much, is groundless, or it makes the chain too long by one link to bring Christian baptism down to us. It ought to hook to Christ; but unfortunately it puts him in as a link in the succession, and hooks to John. Pity it does not start at Christ, even if it be, what all history proves, a myth. But "many things of fair pretense" have been spoiled by being a little overdone.

4. No doubt J. S. B. and all who sympathize with his views feel much comfort in the reflection that a close communion Baptist sits upon the throne of the universe. (If the thought is irreverent we are not responsible for it.) It will be such a vindication of sectarian exclusiveness on the day of judgment for Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans and all other "denominations," and confessors and martyrs, all to stand "speechless," while a Baptist table is spread, and those "who are of this faith and order only" are invited to the feast! Ah! it will then be seen how utterly worthless were repentance and faith, and the "baptism of the Holy Ghost" by the "pouring out of the Spirit," and patience and zeal and charity and holiness, in the absence of immersion by one claiming to be a successor of John the Baptist. This modal test will determine all, and all who cannot hide it must file left! It is no new thing for men to project their own characters upon him who sits "on the throne of the universe." "Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself; but I will reprove thee," etc.—Psalms l, 20–23. Let the reader turn to the passage, and read it in view of the bigoted assumptions of J. S. B. Truth is consistent; but into what perplexities does error always plunge itself!

SIGMA.

To the Friends of Bible Distribution.

The Southwestern Bible Society has during the past few years sent forth large quantities of Bibles and Testaments for distribution, by sale and grant, in and around the principal centers of population in their field, which embraces the State of Louisiana and the southern half of the State of Mississippi. In this way, through the efforts of collecting and distributing agents and auxiliary societies, a great destitution, especially of the cheaper copies of the Scriptures, has been supplied.

A greater and more important work remains to be done—that of supplying the destitutions which still exist among the remote, frontier and secluded habitations of the land. Thousands of families, residing at greater or less distances from thoroughfares, still have no convenient opportunity of obtaining copies of the Scriptures. These families, including children, are generally deprived of the visits, services and instructions of ministers of the gospel. Their condition of remoteness from convenient places of worship, and often of poverty, excites in the highly-favored Christian's heart the deepest sympathy. The question is asked: "How can one hear without a preacher?" A similar question demands an answer frequently to our reproach: "How can they read the word of God unless it be placed in their hands?"

Inasmuch as it is the ordering of God's providence that human instrumentality shall be employed to carry on his own work of human redemption, there remains to the Christian the ever-pressing inquiry: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

The work of Bible distribution is undoubtedly, next to the preaching of the gospel, the great instrumentality to enlighten and save—both having God's blessing promised to their use. Conjecture fails to picture the loss which may be sustained by our needy and irreligious population in consequence of our neglect; but we know that without the teachings of the word of God there is, there can be no hope of salvation to their souls. As mere citizens, too, of a common country, we know that the instructions of the Scriptures are the best guides to honesty, thrift and social contentment—elements all, these, of individual and general prosperity. In which ever way we view the question of the blessing which attends the dissemination of the words of divine truth, the obligation to benefit our fellowmen, temporally and spiritually, is paramount and binding.

The Southwestern Bible Society is about to engage in a persevering plan of reaching our destitute population by means of colportage, that every family and individual in its field, now destitute of a Bible or Testament, may be supplied. The work involves considerable expenditure of money; but the outlay will, by God's blessing, guarantee a rich reward. Your agency in conveying the glad tidings of salvation to the needy and perishing—its consolations to poor and humble Christians living now in solitary neglect, all of whom may be easily reached—will find, we trust, a cheerful manifestation in contributions to the cause now urgently presented. Giving doth not impoverish, but withholding may prove disastrous. We ask your help.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. E. C. DOREMUS,
General Agent S. W. B. S.

The Mysterious Music of the Coast.

Ma. Editor: The cause of this music has often been the subject of conjecture. Some attempt to account for it by a popular tradition handed down from the oldest settlers of the country, and received by them, perhaps, from the natives themselves. The tradition informs us that the Biloxi tribe once waged war against the Pascagoula tribe, and overcame them. The Pascagoula Indians, to escape falling into the hands of the Biloxis, joined hands and marched into the gulf, singing as they went, and thus perished in the waters. From that time until now it is said that the dying song of these Indians may be heard along the coast on a still, calm night.

The singular character of this music may have inclined persons to account for it by fable when they had no means more rational. I am informed that it resembles the sound of a violin when the bow is drawn across the large string next to the base, and it is almost impossible to locate it. Men sleeping on board of a schooner have fancied it, among their bed clothing or blankets, have fancied it on the mast, or anywhere to which they would direct their attention.

Learning that Samuel Davis, an old settler, could explain the whole mystery, we determined to visit him the next morning. So to-day we called upon him and learned the following particulars, which at once accounts for the music in a rational manner, and dissipates all those superstitious notions respecting the wail of the drowning Indians.

In the year 1833 Bro. Davis, hearing this music in the bayou near his residence, took a lighted torch and proceeded to make search for it near his little wharf, where some oysters had been opened and the shells were scattered about in the edge of the water. He failed to make any discovery. Some time after, when fishing with a cast-net, he fortunately caught the fish that made the music. He stated that it was about seven inches long, more slender than a flying fish, and resembling an oyster fish in shape more than any other. It was dark-colored on the back, which prevented him from seeing it by torch-light. Its nose terminated in a horn, about one inch and a half long, that resembled the spur of a rooster. The mouth was under that part of the nose from which the horn projected. He heard the fish in the net before he drew it out, and when he had caught it he placed it in a bucket of salt water, and it made music there. Bro. Davis was so careful in his examination as to ascertain that the sound proceeded from the gills of the fish. There can be no doubt that this is the fish that produces this strange music. It must retire to the deep water in the day-time, and return to sing only in the stillness of the night.

If any one would catch another fish of this kind, and preserve it alive, it would certainly be an acquisition to natural history, and a source of pleasure to the fortunate fisherman.

GEOLOGY AND THE BIBLE.

Mr. Editor: In an article published in the ADVOCATE of October 24, written by T. A. Lancaster, he almost asserts that we cannot believe the Bible account of the origin of man if we admit the theory of geology to be correct. Now I cannot believe that man and the earth were created at the same time; for the Bible says: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." Now recollect that these things were done in the beginning. Had God no habitation before the existence of man? The heaven and the earth were evidently created at the same time, but man might have been created many thousands of years later. The earth, in my opinion, was certainly in existence when the Almighty concluded to stock it with living beings, vegetables, trees, etc. But when God came to create man he arranged the earth, and made it a suitable habitation for him. I should like very much for some good writer, possessed of strong thinking powers, to take hold of this beginning, and try what he can do with it.

I suppose there are but very few persons who believe that God dwelt in darkness up to the time that man was created; but if Mr. Lancaster's views are correct, I cannot see how it could be otherwise.

THE REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER, in one of his graver moments, was asked by a man of consequence how he managed to keep his congregation always wide awake. Mr. Beecher looked into the countenance of his interlocutor and replied: "By sleeping so much myself."

Obituaries.

SISTER MARTHA A. BARR, wife of R. W. Barr, of Pike county, Mississippi, and daughter of J. B. and Mahala Lewis, was born February 14, 1837, and died September 25, 1872. Sister Barr was married January 20, 1857, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1859, from which time until her death she remained a consistent member of the church.

I do not think I ever witnessed a more triumphant death in my life. Sister Barr was speechless for several hours before she died, yet she was conscious of everything around, and she frequently gave evidence of her unshaken confidence in her Savior. While we sang

"Jesus, lover of my soul," and other spiritual songs, she would put her right hand opposite her breast and point up, assuring us that her spirit would soon be at rest. At fifteen minutes before three o'clock on the morning of the twenty-fifth of September she quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

H. P. LEWIS.

SALLIE B. WILLIAMS died about noon, September 21, 1872. Her sufferings were intense but short—only about thirty hours. Though the call was so sudden, yet it found her ready; for though she was a child—being twelve on the thirteenth of April, 1872—she gave the fullest evidences of a bright Christian experience. She told her mother she was going to die; but when asked if she was afraid she answered: "No, no. I regret to leave you all, but I'm not afraid." When she saw she was going she said, "Kiss me good-by, mamma," and then kissed her schoolmates and associates, and fell asleep in Jesus.

Sallie professed religion two weeks before, near her mother's, at a meeting we were holding four miles from town (Starkville, Mississippi,) and she manifested zeal and courage that should rebuke many that were much older. The night after her conversion we preached a short time from the text: "We love him because he first loved us." After giving several reasons, we called upon the congregation to give at least one reason why they loved God. While many seemed ashamed or afraid to thus confess Jesus, she arose, though naturally timid, and said: "I love him because he has converted my soul and made me happy." J. L. FUTRELL.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, Death has crossed the threshold of our college and taken from us one of our number; AND WHEREAS, We of the band of which he was but so recently a member feel it our duty to express our heartfelt sorrow and our sympathy for those who mourn this sad occurrence; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of CHARLES R. BOLLS the Clariosopic Society has lost a true and worthy member, and our college an earnest friend.

Resolved, That though our hearts are sad as we deposit the cherished dead in the silent and lonely grave, yet when we reflect upon the fact that the time will surely come when those who are in their graves shall come forth to life, we may, with hearts full of gratitude and hope, exclaim: "Te Deum laudamus."

Resolved, That we extend to the afflicted friends and relations of the deceased our warmest and sincerest sympathy, and in evidence of our sorrow wear the badge of mourning thirty days.

G. WAVERLEY BRIGGS,

WILLIAM L. PEEMLES,
M. N. MORRIS,
Committee.

ON THE twenty-first of October, at 4 P.M., in Tuskegee, Alabama, our beloved sister, SIDNEY A. B. SLAUGHTER, fell asleep in Jesus, after about two years of great physical suffering. On the twentieth of August her only daughter, Theresa E. Slaughter, nearly eight years old, after a brief illness, preceded her mother to the Father's home only two months.

Sister Slaughter united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in childhood, and lived a consistent member until her death. Ever alive to all the interests of the church, a lady of intelligence, taste and remarkable energy, she was always ready to engage in any and every enterprise that conduced to the prosperity of Zion. She was remarkably popular in and out of the church. But her work was soon finished—only thirty-four years of age when the Master said: "Lay down thy armor; come take the crown." The last two weeks of her stay on earth was a constant exhibition of grace and triumph. She told me Christ was with her as she was passing through the valley of the shadow of death, and sent a message to the church: "Tell them I die in the triumphs of faith. Meet me in my Father's house." She leaves behind her a husband, an only son, three brothers and a sister to mourn their loss. God grant that sanctifying grace may be given them, and that they may live and die as she lived and died.

FAITH.

Dr. F. W. Krummacher relates this beautiful and simple story of faith, of Rev. Mr. Henke:

A Christian friend came one day to this man of God, who unhesitatingly invited him to dine with him, although he knew not what he could set before him. When the bell rang at noon the servant passed several times through the room, with an anxious countenance, in order, unobservedly, to beckon her master out. Henke, however, was not aware of her meaning, and only reminded her, at last, that it was time to lay the cloth. The servant was perplexed, and requested her master to step out to her for a minute. "Sir," she began in a mournful voice, "you wish me to lay the cloth, but don't you know we have scarcely a piece of dry bread in the house, and you sent your last penny to a sick person this day?" "Ah!" answered Henke with a smile, "is that all you have to say to me? Do but lay the cloth as usual; it will be time enough for the meat when we sit down to table." The maid, not a little astonished, did as she was told. "Let us take our seats," said the friendly host, with a cheerful countenance. They sit down to the empty table, and the worthy, child-like man offers up a prayer. On his saying "Amen!" the door-bell is rung, and there is a basket with abundance of food, which a neighbor had felt constrained to send to him. Calmly, as if nothing particular had happened, Henke ordered all the dishes to be filled; and then, looking smilingly at the astonished servant, he said: "Well, have you still anything to object to our kind entertainer?"

These, says Dr. Krummacher, are valuable facts; but such things cannot be imitated. It is certainly easy to order the cloth to be laid; but nothing is accomplished by that. However, if you possess anything of Henke's faith, then do not hesitate to order the cloth to be laid. A Royal Host will provide the feast.

NATURE OF RESIGNATION.

BY JULIUS STURN.

Pain's furnace-heat within me quivers;
God's breath upon the flame doth blow;
And all my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I whisper: As God will!
And in his hottest fire stand still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so,
Into his own fair shape to bent it
With his great hammer, blow on blow;
And yet I whisper: As God will!
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er and heats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
And yet I whisper: As God will!
And in his mighty hand hold still.

Why should I murmur? for the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me;
So, I say, trusting: As God will!
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles, for my profit purely,
Affliction's glowing, fiery brand;
And all his heaviest blows are surely
Inflicted by a Master hand;
So I say, praising: As God will!
And hope in him, and suffer still.

THE REFORMATION IN MEXICO.

BY THE REV. H. H. FAIRALL, A. M.

For more than three hundred years Mexico had been cursed with Romish despotism and Spanish rule, and hence the ignorance, superstition and crime that have prevailed. It had been the darkest and most degraded of all papal lands; and though on this continent, and so near our enlightened nation, yet it was, until recently, closed against Protestantism and true Christian civilization. During the war in 1846 a door was opened, and many of our pious soldiers carried Bibles into Mexico, and from that small beginning the sacred Scriptures in the Spanish language have been slowly finding their way to the homes of the benighted people.

About the close of the war in 1847, Miss Melinda Rankin, then residing in Mississippi, ascertained from the returned soldiers the miserable condition of the Mexicans, and she resolved to go as a missionary. It was not, however, until 1852 that she could commence operations. The laws of the country forbidding the introduction of Protestant Christianity, she settled at Brownsville, Texas, on the Rio Grande river, opposite Matamoras, Mexico, where a large number of Mexicans resided. She soon gathered the children into a school and gave them daily instructions in the Bible.

While engaged in this noble work she learned that seven Jesuit priests and fifteen nuns from France had reached Brownsville, and intended to erect a convent. Hence, in order to compete with this strong force, she determined that her small school should become a seminary. Early in 1853 she came to the United States, visiting the principal cities, and endeavoring to secure aid. After a laborious effort of fourteen months she returned in April, 1854, with the small sum of $2 500 In November of the same year the seminary was opened, and continued in successful operation until 1862 During that time two hundred girls of Mexican and one hundred of American parentage were instructed, and through many of these pupils, and their friends, hundreds of Bibles and Testaments were carried into Mexico.

In 1855, shortly after the erection of the seminary at Brownsville, Miss Rankin became connected with the American and Foreign Christian Union, and is still in its employ. Her educational work was interrupted in 1862 by the civil war in the United States, she not being in sympathy with the Confederacy, and the school property was confiscated. In 1865 she went to Monterey and organized another seminary, but was compelled to visit the United States and solicit funds. She obtained $14,000, and erected a fine building.

As converts from Romanism began to multiply, Miss Rankin, through the aid of the American and Foreign Christian Union, sent out seven native colporteurs to labor among their countrymen. In 1868 a large number of Mexicans were converted at Villa-de-Cos, a town in the State of Zacatecas, and since then the membership of the society has increased to one hundred and seventy. A commodious edifice has been built, and a regular pastor supplies the pulpit. There are flourishing churches in Monterey, Cadereita, and many other places in northern Mexico.

In January, 1869, the American and Foreign Christian Union sent Rev. H. C. Riley to the City of Mexico to organize a Protestant mission there. He was peculiarly qualified for the work, having been born in Chili, and being familiar with the Spanish language. On reaching his destination he found about thirty native Evangelical Christians, who had been holding regular meetings for worship and the study of the Bible. This small flock had received the instructions of a Roman Catholic presbyter, named Aquilar, who was converted to Christ through the reading of the Holy Scriptures. He was extremely poor; suffered cruel persecution, and finally died from the debility brought on by his poverty.

The success of Dr. Riley is unprecedented in the history of modern missions. The latest report shows at least sixty organized congregations, with thirty-five persons in charge. In the City of Mexico several prominent priests have been converted, and are now preaching the doctrines of Protestant Christianity. Manuel Aguas was one of the most earnest, talented and influential priests in Mexico. Hence his renunciation of Romanism created an intense excitement among the papists of that country. The archbishop excommunicated him, and, in return, Aguas wrote a lengthy letter, reviewing the doctrines and usages of the Romish system. It is a very able production, and has been published in the Christian World, the organ of the American and Foreign Christian Union. Palacios, another converted priest, is attracting multitudes by his evangelical preaching, and others, now in the field, might be named.

There are two fine cathedrals in the City of Mexico owned and occupied by Protestants. The ex-convent of San Francisco is a magnificent edifice, and will accommodate an immense audience. Aguas is in charge of the congregation worshiping there. Besides this, another large ex-convent church, that of San Jose de Gracia, affords ample room for at least twelve hundred persons. The other congregations in the city meet in hired halls and private houses.

In December last four hundred converted Romanists assembled in one of these spacious edifices, and partook of the sacrament, which was administered by Dr. Riley and four ex-priests. The scene is said to have been affecting. Indeed this remarkable revival in Mexico is something more than a mere outward reformation. The conversions appear to be thorough, and a genuine piety pervades the membership of the "Church of Jesus."

It is not surprising that such a work in a neighboring republic, containing nearly ten millions of Romanists, should excite a deep interest. The proximity of Mexico, and the probability of its annexation to our country, render its intellectual, political and religious condition a matter of great importance. The introduction of such a powerful, dangerous element into our population would be disastrous. Romanism is sufficiently strong among us without annexing multitudes of the Latin race. Patriotism and philanthropy demand that the Mexicans should be enlightened and evangelized. We must give them an open Bible, free schools and pure churches. The glorious triumphs of the gospel in the past few years indicate what can be done in the future. The danger now is that the work will be seriously embarrassed for the want of money. Dr. Riley has come to the United States to solicit aid, and our men of wealth should consider it a privilege to assist him.

The policy of the American and Foreign Christian Union, in uniting the various Protestant denominations against Romanism, has been divinely approved. Its success in Greece, Italy, Hungary, France, Spain, Chili, Mexico and other papal lands shows that a united Protestantism is the only religious force that can speedily overthrow popery. This society was the pioneer missionary organization in Mexico, and had been the chief agent in carrying on the work. An English Methodist, writing from that field, says: "Mr. Riley has shown himself thoroughly catholic in his conduct and teachings, as the object of his mission is not to set up any particular church, but to work on the broad principle of the 'Evangelical Union' for the salvation of souls, throwing aside all isms. This I consider a wise step, as it would be unwise for him or any other person to come here and show our Protestant weakness by seeking to establish any particular church, having one of the many names which abound, and thus giving the Romanists a strong argument (for them) against us—namely, that we lack union, and so cannot be the Church of Christ."

Miss Rankin says: "A great work is given the American and Foreign Christian Union to perform, and it is demanding the combined efforts of all Protestant Christendom. A united front can only compete successfully with such a formidable foe as the Romish Church."—Methodist

THE DOCTRINE OF EVOLUTION.

BY REV. E. F. BURR, D. D., AUTHOR OF "ECCE COELUM," ETC.

The doctrine of evolution, as actually held, consists of three parts—first, the nebular hypothesis, which undertakes to show how worlds and systems of worlds were made in a natural way from a fire mist; second, the doctrine of spontaneous generation, which undertakes to show the natural origin of life, and the simpler sorts of organism; third, the doctrine of transmutation of species, which undertakes to show how all the higher sorts of plants and animals came, by a series of natural changes, from one or a few simple species spontaneously produced.

In regard to this last part of the scheme of evolution Agassiz writes thus: "I wish to enter my earnest protest against the transmutation theory. It is my belief that naturalists are chasing a phantom in their search after some material gradation among created beings by which the whole animal kingdom may have been derived by successive development from a single germ, or from a few germs. I confess that there seems to me a repulsive poverty in this material explanation that is contradicted by the intellectual grandeur of the universe. I insist that this theory is opposed to the processes of nature, as we have been able to apprehend them."

This strong testimony against a part of the law-scheme seems to me not too strong to be borne against the whole. The whole scheme, cosmical and physiological—deriving worlds in their orderly and balanced arrangements from a fiery cloud by such laws as those of heat and gravity, and gradually peopling these worlds with the marvels of vegetable and animal and rational life, in the way of spontaneous generation and transmutation of species—this entire scheme seems to me utterly unscientific. I have studied it long. I have read about it much and thought about it more. I have listened to the arguments of its enemies, and to the arguments of its friends as well. And, altogether, I must say that, while fully allowing the high scientific character of some leading evolutionists, and the real value of many of the facts that they have gathered, and even many interesting analogies between their theory and fact, my opinion of that theory is just as unfavorable from the side of science as it is from the side of religion.

It is not science. It is not even a scientific speculation—only a speculation held by some scientific men, and by still more who are no men of science at all. As best drawn out, it is very ingenious, very elaborate, very showy, with not a few plausible agreements with nature—in these respects, not unlike many other things which nobody believes in—but, after all, deserves quite as severe words as Agassiz and Miller and Sedgewick and Brewster and the younger Herschel, and many another great student of nature has spoken against it. That is to say—it is a dream. It is an air-castle. It is a chain of guesses and possibilities and suppositions holding up a bubble. It is the mythology of science, defended by such assumptions, fancies, analogies, odds and ends of truth and error, dexterously woven together, as can be brought forward in favor of the stories in our classical dictionaries. Despite its notoriety, despite some learned and scientific features, despite the support it has had from some men of real scientific attainments, it may well be doubted if ever another hypothesis made so great a figure on so small a capital.

If any think it hardly possible that so many men of scientific pursuits should take up the doctrine of evolution on very slight grounds, I refer them in part explanation to two things: The first is that original sin of mankind, the desire to see just as little of God in the universe as possible; and which is ever saying in the hearts of irreligious men, scientific as well as other: "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." And the second is the very curious history of science and philosophy. Has emptiest speculation never set up claim to be called science, and had a very considerable following? Have scientists never held to any extravagant opinions? Have they never been forced to take back things which they have most positively asserted and most zealously fought for? Have not even the mathematicians sometimes exchanged characters with the poets, and been as flighty with their differentials and integrals as are the bay-crowned men who make flight a profession? Has philosophy, so called, always shown itself to be the same as Euclid? Nay; has it not often fathered and mothered such outrageous and preposterous notions as almost to bring its very name into contempt among sensible people? There is no need to give examples. The facts are notorious. Every scholar with common sense has blushed for them over and over again. A very mortifying history, indeed, is that of so-called science and philosophy—although an autobiography—about as humiliating as must be to a Jew that history which his nation has written of itself in the Old Testament. When the philosophers set out to be foolish there is no folly quite equal to theirs. Even the annals of the inductive sciences will help one to understand how very possible it is for very slender speculations to get audience and friends and champions in scientific circles.—New York Observer.

Success of Protestant Missions.

In the August number of the Foreign Missionary of the Presbyterian Church the question is instituted at large: Do missions pay? It is shown that they do pay, by reason of (1) their commercial value, (2) their incidental advantages, (3) their direct success. Under the third head some statements are so summary that we can present them. He begins with the Presbyterian Church, and then considers others.

"The foreign field for the past ten years has yielded more converts in proportion to the labor expended than the home field.

"The number added to the Presbyterian Church in our land in 1870 on profession of faith, compared with the whole membership, was six per cent. Gain of foreign missions as a whole, twelve per cent; gain of the A. B. C. F. M. as a whole, fourteen per cent.; gain of the Presbyterian missions in India, sixteen per cent.; gain of the A. B. C. F. M. in Eastern Turkey, eighteen per cent.; gain of the Presbyterian missions in China, twenty-five per cent.

"This statement shows a heavy preponderance in favor of conversions in the foreign field. In the Sandwich Islands alone 'the number of persons received into church fellowship, on profession of faith, is more than equal to the present population over four years of age, amounting in all to 55 :00, or on an average about 1,400 to each ordained missionary.' 'The number received into twenty churches, in the twenty-six years following 1837, was 49,713, which is an annual average of about 1,900.'"

Taking a more general and comprehensive view of the whole field, the following statements are made:

"To compute the results of modern missions is simply impossible. Figures cannot express them, nor are they visible to the human eye. But it is interesting to know that outside the bounds of Christendom there are 4,000 centers of Christian work and gospel teaching; 2,500 congregations, 273 000 communicants, and 1,350,000 nominal Christians."

The Rev. Dr. Mullens, corresponding secretary of the London Missionary Society, says:

"In more than three hundred islands of Eastern and Southern Polynesia the gospel has swept heathenism entirely away. The missionaries of the four great societies (English) have gathered 400,000 people under Christian influences, of whom a quarter of a million are living, and 50,000 of these are communicants."

FAMILY WORSHIP.

Family worship is an ordinance which God has frequently blessed to the saving of souls. In houses where it is conducted with life and feeling, it has often proved a converting ordinance. A few years ago an Englishman visited America and spent some days with a pious friend. He was a man of talent and accomplishments, but an infidel. Four years afterward he returned to the same house—a Christian. They wondered at the change, but little suspected when and where it had originated. He told them that he was present at their family worship, on the first evening of his former visit, and when, after the chapter was read, they all knelt down to pray—the recollection of such scenes in his father's house, long years ago, rushed in on his memory so that he did not hear a single word. But the occurrence made him think, and his thoughtfulness ended in his leaving the howling wilderness of infidelity, and finding a quiet rest in the salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ.

We might enumerate many like instances. Many servants have been awakened through family worship. Children have often heard these truths, which, when the Spirit brought them to remembrance in after days—perhaps in days of profligacy, and when far from their father's house—sent home the prodigal. It is not only of Zion's solemn assemblies, but of Jacob's humble dwellings—the little fireside sanctuaries—that "the Lord shall count when he writeth up the people, This man was born there." We would ask of every Christian: "In your house there have been, perhaps, several accountable beings born into the world. Have there been any born again?"—Episcopal Recorder.

A GOOD DRAIN ON A FARM.—Heavy mortgage at ten per cent. will drain it about as rapidly as anything we know of.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE BIBLE IN INDIA.—In the British empire in India fourteen versions of the whole Bible are printed in as many different languages, the principal tongues of the empire. The whole New Testament is published in five others, and twenty separate books of the Bible in seven more. Within ten years there have been circulated of Bibles, in whole or in part, 1,514,940 copies, and of other Christian tracts and books, 8,604,033 copies.

THE Rev. Dr. Jessup, missionary at Beirut, Syria, speaks of the light breaking over the East. A part of his letter is as follows: "I am almost amazed at the extent to which evangelical light pervades the nominally Christian communities here. The Greek Church in Beirut will go over en masse some day to Protestantism, if the light continue to spread in the future as it has in the past ten years. A prominent Greek merchant said a few days ago: 'You Protestants need not trouble yourselves about converting Syria. Our children are all going to be Protestants, whether you will or not. The Bible is doing the work.'"

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY SECRETARY. The last London Watchman brings us news of the death of Rev. Stephen Rabone, for many years (1834–51) a missionary in the Friendly Islands, but who had been since 1851 stationed in New South Wales. In 1861 he was chosen president of the Australasian Conference, and next year, on the retirement of the Rev. John Eggleston, succeeded him as secretary of the Australasian Missionary Committee, an office which he filled with great ability and fidelity. His death was quite unexpected. On his way to preach at Chippendale he was seized with an attack of apoplexy, and died in a moment, on Sunday evening, July 21, 1872.

A JEWISH commission sent out from New York to Jerusalem has returned, and made a report of what they saw, which the Jewish Times says "is an additional argument against the folly of encouraging the emigration of the Jews to a country which has no other claim than that of a venerable monument of the past." The squalid nucleus of sixteen thousand Jews now in Palestine does not promise well for a general gathering of that people there. The commission suggests "the general elimination from all Jewish prayer books of the portions referring to the hopes of Israel in the restitution of the Holy Land to the possession of Israel, and the rebuilding of the temple by divine providence."

ENGLISH WESLEYAN HOME MISSION RECEIPTS.—Rev. Charles Prest, secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Home Mission Fund, London, makes the gratifying announcement in the last London papers that the income of the fund for 1871–72 amounts to £30,015 17s. 10d. This is the largest income yet received for one year, and exceeds that obtained by the committee sixteen years since, namely, 1856, by £19,025. This is manifestly owing to the revival of the aggressive work of home evangelization, and warrants the hope that, ere long, the sum will more fully approximate to £100,000 per annum, which is not beyond the necessities of the work to which the Methodists are called, or beyond their ability to furnish.

THE Synod of the Presbyterian Church in northern Iowa has passed resolutions declaring that the action of the last Legislature in abolishing the death penalty was hasty and unwise, and recommending to all Christian people that petitions be circulated looking to the restoration of the law as it formerly stood. The Waterloo Journal, a leading newspaper of Iowa, states that since the repeal of the death penalty, only six months ago, the increase in the ratio of crime has been enormous; and this fact, coupled with the interpretation of the law by the courts in the cases of capital felons, has already created in some places a determination to resort to lynch law, and administer unauthorized vengeance.

WE OBSERVE, says the Central Christian Advocate, a call in the Methodist Home Journal for the name and address of the communicants and adherents of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Philadelphia who would regard with favor the organization of a church (congregation) in which the liturgy provided by Mr. Wesley for the use of the Methodists shall be observed. A writer in the same paper says there are thousands of adherents of our church strongly inclined to liturgical worship—that the introduction of Mr. Wesley's revised liturgy would be no innovation, but a return to first principles. He would not advocate a compulsory use of it in any of our churches, but the permission to use it by such congregations as prefer to do so.

SODPA GJALZAN has been baptized as Nathanael, and been received into the Christian Church of the Moravian Brethren at Pu, in Central Asia. As he was a chief lama, and one universally regarded with the highest veneration, the occasion was an important one both for the candidate and the church in Thibet, and the day was one of general rejoicing among the Christian community of the place. He naturally becomes the teacher of the school there, for which his extensive learning in everything pertaining to the laws and religion of the land eminently qualify him. As he was in former times regarded as inspired, his influence will still be widely felt. He receives visits every day, and is never ashamed to testify to his people of all he has found in the gospel. From the other lamas his life might be in danger were it not that his superiority and ability to teach them is felt, and that his lovely character and benevolent conduct claim their admiration.

SPIRIT-RAPPING IN INDIA.—The Bombay papers, says the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, contain accounts of a mania for spirit-rapping which they say has set in among the natives there. If the statements are correct it would not be surprising if the mania ran through India. Everything connected with the spirit world is a profound mystery to the native of India. He has no definite ideas as to the future. He confesses at once it may be this or that—he knows not what. A city with golden pavements astonishes him, but really the definiteness is what puzzles him. If spirit-rapping finds its way among such people we shall have queer revelations by-and-by. They will intensify a hundred-fold the mysteries, and will make a thousand more. Religion will not stand in the way in the slightest degree. A Hindoo is free to examine anything on the face of the earth, and speculate to his heart's content.

THE collections for Muller's Orphan House, Bristol, England, amounted, during the year ending May 26, 1872, to about $100,000, "all received," it is alleged, in "answer to prayer, without applying to individuals for help." It is really time that this sort of talk should stop. Mr. Muller is doing a most excellent work, with economy and patience; but there is no more miracle about it than there is about the success of Mr. Bonner's Ledger. There is actually no charitable institution in the world that is advertised so thoroughly. This paragraph, with a thousand others in all the newspapers of Christendom, will help to make its merits known. We have no doubt that effectual prayer has much to do with the success of these orphan houses; but to ignore the legitimate human agencies constantly at work, and to pretend that the whole operation is supernatural, is a species of delusion in which we had better indulge sparingly.—Independent.

SIR DONALD MCLEOD, lieutenant governor of the Punjaub, has recently expressed his views in reference to the progress and value of missions in India, as follows: "In many places an impression prevails that our missions have not produced results adequate to the efforts which have been made; but I trust enough has been said to prove that there is no real foundation for this impression, and those who hold such opinions know but little of the reality. * * * The work may be going on silently; but when the process of undermining the mountain of idolatry has been completed the whole may be expected to fall with rapidity and crumble to dust. The prayers and exertions of a Christian people are required to press on the government the necessity of doing everything a government legitimately can do to promote the progress of Christianity and a sound morality throughout India, whether they can take a direct part in spreading the former or not. Above all, they should be urged to send out Christian rulers—men who are faithful and are not ashamed of the gospel."

THE general survey of the missions of the American Board thus speaks of woman's work among women in the Turkish empire: "The work in behalf of women has been prosecuted with ever-increasing success. Whatever doubts may have existed in the minds of any at home or abroad in reference to the employment of unmarried ladies in missionary work may well be dissipated in the light of results accomplished and still more brilliant in prospect. Hundreds of girls brought under the personal influence of Christian teachers from this country, and preparing to diffuse the culture they receive among thousands and tens of thousands of others—women in lonely mountain villages, whose faces have hitherto borne witness only to the stolid ignorance and degradation of their lot, lighting up with new hope as they cry: 'Now are we human beings also. Somebody does care for our souls!' and giving promise of future Christian homes—such are some of the results in progress, and which called forth from the Western Turkey mission, at the last annual meeting, a resolution of thanks to the Woman's Board and earnest prayer for the divine blessing on their labors."

OUR PASTORAL VISIT.

We have to think a great many ways of a great many kinds of people and of a great variety of objects as the making up of our weekly paper goes on. Not what we would like, nor always what we think best for ourselves, but what will do our readers the most good is the uppermost thought. Something to meet their spiritual, mental and social wants, and to help them to holy and happy lives is our constant study. Scholars and philosophers are comparatively few; the preachers are not numerous as compared with the people. A crumb now and then for them is well enough, but the mission of the ADVOCATE is to the people and their homes. We try to make it a wholesome, faithful and acceptable visitor to them, putting into it just such matter and in such proportions as shall best serve this purpose.

We break the ice by asking and telling the news, what is going on in the world and in the church, and there is some talk about the crops and markets. Something literary may come in after awhile, and what the brethren and sisters are thinking about as exhibited on the second page, and what the editor has found particularly good usually reserved for the third and fourth pages. The topics suited especially for housekeepers and farmers are necessarily confined to a very limited space, and when we call for the children we feel ashamed that they should be put in a "corner;" but we make as much of it as possible, and spare no pains to give them the best we can find. That corner is not always very solemn, to be sure, but the drift is toward goodness and the better land. After all, we want to get nearer to the hearts of our family readers, to enter into their home life, and especially to penetrate where only the most loved and intimate can go—into their deepest spiritual experience. This is what the living pastor desires; it is what the ADVOCATE, in its weekly visits, aims to do.

We would fain get a hearing about this matter of the soul's salvation after the preliminaries and accessories of the social hour are gone through with. Supposing that the ADVOCATE has eyes and ears and league, it begins to see and hear, and perhaps talk, as soon as its wrapper is fairly torn off. What a variety it meets? Homes elegantly furnished, filled with well-dressed people, sumptuous tables, and music from rosewood pianos. Other homes where the welcome is warmer, and where the paper is received with smiles and many demonstrations of delight, but the shadow of sorrow has fallen on those thresholds, and also the trial of earthly losses. To the mansion and the lowly cabin, to the rich and the poor it comes. What people it sees, what talk it hears, and what treatment it receives! A word in season for almost everybody is what it ought to have, and perhaps it generally has. Food for the thoughtful, instruction for the inquirer after God, and comfort for the weary and afflicted should not be sought in vain. These years of care and labor would be well repaid if even, in a few instances, the ADVOCATE has led sinners to Christ, helped believers to a better and deeper experience, and brought comfort to the bereaved and stricken.

Doubtless in its pastoral rounds the ADVOCATE sees and hears many pleasant things, and some that are strange and painful; but it does not come back to tell. It never reports the household religion, the well-ordered piety, the generous benevolence, the faithful observance of religious duties; no more does it witness to us the neglect of family worship, ill-trained children, and hurtful and godless ways and doings. To some its message may be one of rebuke and awakening, and to others a visit of consolation and encouragement. As our thousands of readers come up before us we think of the time when God shall bring every secret thing into judgment, and when "the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." May those who read and those who write be clear in that day! In view of this responsibility we would endeavor to build up the personal piety of our readers, to break up the fallow ground, and to urge each one to repentance, faith and holiness.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

MR. EDITOR: I send you the appointments of the Trinity Conference, which adjourned day before yesterday, at Sulphur Springs. This Conference is growing by the numbers received upon profession of faith and by the large immigration which has set toward its territory from Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas and Missouri. It is full of preachers. Your Louisiana needs men just now far more than Texas. Yet the preachers are very hearty in their welcome to transfers. At Belton a young brother who appeared as transfer from the Western Conference, without anything save wife and child, found himself soon in possession of a horse worth over $100, a saddle, some $20 in gold, and a very good circuit. All done like magic—the way true Christianity works.

The territory between Waxahachie and Sulphur Springs is prairie for the most part—lime land—and for the rest wood land lying along the sources of the Sabine and the watersheds of the Trinity. A good buggy, a famous span of horses, and with Bro. Veal for driver and companion, brought me to Sulphur Springs in something over two days. Toward the last of the trip we felt the nip of a gentle norther—not enough to disturb the pleasure of the drive. The Conference session was a very busy and harmonious one. In this country there is much to be done in the way of starting schools, building churches and parsonages, enlarging the lines of circuits and establishing missions. A new Conference has something of the interest and life of a new clearing. I have always had a great fancy for frontier life, and have imagined that, were I seeking merely my own physical comfort, I should expect to find most just inside of the Indian line. The Conference was finely entertained by the good people of Sulphur Springs, and they gave, besides, a good missionary collection at the anniversary—some $800. The church was dedicated on Sunday—all paid for—and had cost some $6,000. The increase of membership for the past year is two thousand three hundred and ninety-three. Eleven preachers were received on trial, and some four or five readmitted.

Directly after Conference Brother Morris brought me down to this point—a ride of fifty miles. We just made it in time to escape a severe norther, which has been blowing the past two days. Everything hereabouts reminds me of my war residence in east Texas. Two years in Shelby and Sabine entitles one to all the rights and privileges of an "old Texan." The sandy lands of the Sabine look poor beside the black soil of the prairies; but the corn-cribs, the dwelling houses, orchards and general expression of the farms indicate that the fertility of the sandy soil is nearly equal to that of the lime.

Day after to-morrow I leave for Tyler, the seat of the East Texas Conference.

GARDEN VALLEY, Nov. 15, 1872.

BISHOP McTYEIRE IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Want of space compels us to leave out some parts of the Bishop's interesting letter. We extract from the Nashville Christian Advocate:

In the afternoon we rode out to Los Nietos, twelve miles, where Conference was opened on Wednesday, the sixteenth. Of the proceedings you have been advised. Here I found myself among old acquaintances and friends from "the States"—Rev. William Moores, and his son-in-law, Rev. G. E. Butler, Rev. J. C. Ardis, Goodrich, Edward Barnett, Dr. Hannon and their families. In 1868-9 Bro. Ardis moved here from Arkansas, coming slowly and perilously by the El Paso route. He got sixty-five acres of land, and took root instantly. Moved by his representations, twenty families have followed him. Here is that excellent layman, Frank E. Adams, from Texas, Bro. Steel and Dr. Edwards, from Arkansas, and others—a very Southern settlement, in which Georgia and Mississippi and Louisiana and Alabama and Tennessee are represented. During the meeting Mr. B. Harris and family, formerly of Sumner county, Tennessee, were present from San Bernardino, and Colonel Sanford and family, worthy connections of my friends and former parishioners in Montgomery, Alabama. Here are the two Adamses—Abram and Samuel—preachers once in the Mobile Conference, and preaching yet—and Rev. Cyprian Gridley, whom I first met in New Orleans when beginning my pastorate there. A home-feeling awaited me where I thought myself farthest from home!

Few persons about Los Nietos own more than forty acres. That is enough. They came here poor, and were not able to buy more. Most of them have paid for their limited freehold by its products. It is a land of corn and wine. The cornfields run up to the doors and surround the houses.

As our brethren in Oregon have an educational center at Corvallis, and those in the Pacific Conference have one at Santa Rosa, so these have a collegiate institute at Los Nietos. Prof. Cummings has been superintending it for a year, and they are fortunate in a continuance of his services. Measures were taken at the late session of the Conference for a $10,000 building. They have sixteen acres of land—a most eligible site—ten acres of which was presented by a generous citizen, Bro. Steel. We have in this Los Nietos neighborhood what would be regarded elsewhere as a model community. Old-fashioned Methodism is established among them. Their camp meeting in September was attended by large crowds for many days, and the conversions were many.

After Conference, in company with our host, F. E. Adams, and Bro. Asa Ellis, of Elmonte, who, besides his excellent company, gave us his carriage and horses for four days, we went on a farther visitation and exploration of the valley. Twenty miles brought us to Anaheim, a German town of one thousand inhabitants. They are wine-growers principally. I saw no church of any sort among them; neat buildings and shops, live fences, water from the Santana running here and there at their will. The vintage was over, and the grape-stems thrown upon the roads and crossings looked at a little distance like tan-bark, as we sometimes see it strewn along walks. Eight miles westward is Anaheim Landing, and there our steamer, the next week, took on fifty-seven pipes of wine.

Seven miles south of Anaheim is Santana, a smaller village. Here Bros. Tichenal and Johnson, lay members, met us, and we preached at night to a good congregation in the school house. As the next session of Conference is to be held here, the friends and brethren expect to have a church house ready for it; and I think they will, and that no mean one. When I say we preached, I mean, as was our custom, that Dr. Sargent preached and I exhorted, or vice versa.

Next day, October 22, the company, now increased by our two hosts and Dr. Greenleaf (formerly of Yazoo, Mississippi,) went around, seeing the fruits of the earth, and calling on the neighbors. These people have no fine stock to show you, nor factories, nor machines, nor great houses, but simply the fruits of the earth. These are sufficiently entertaining and sufficiently wonderful. I must draw on my memoranda, taken on the spot: Called on W. N. Tedford—sixty acres—came here 1869—bought land at $12 per acre on credit—wouldn't take $100. Native of Lincoln county, Tennessee—lived in Missouri. This neighborhood called Gospel Swamp, say three miles by four; only two families in Gospel Swamp when Tedford came; now forty-five. Last year, off of five acres, measured one hundred and thirty-three bushels average per acre. Sold to a new-comer two acres of corn in the field for $62.50 per acre—corn at fifty cents per bushel. Says it is a great deal harder to gather a crop than to make it.

Bro. Tedford, when we came upon him, was engaged with his boys and a "hand" or two digging and housing potatoes. Near by was his pumpkin-patch, and as he raised the biggest last year, he proposed to the company to walk in and weigh one he should select. The ropes were put under it, secundum artem; it weighed one hundred and seventy-seven pounds. "Here's one," said somebody, "that will beat that." Weight only one hundred and fifty. "This one looks like it was thicker through, but not so big on the outside," said somebody else, with his foot on a specimen. It weighed one hundred and sixty-two.

Happy in the ownership of forty-six acres adjoining is Levi Fickas, an honest Missourian, limping from the effects of Confederate sympathy. Let us see what Fickas can show us; after paying our respects to Mrs. Tedford, and eating watermelons and cantelopes. Passing along the narrow road separating corn-fields and alfalfa-plots, I agreed with the company in reckoning twenty-five barrels to the acre; though in "the States" I have seen standing corn reckoned at fifteen barrels, and doubted always. Here it stood thick, three, four, five and six stalks in a hill, vying with each other in tallness and robustness. A cluster of four stalks had seven ears; standing erect on the ground and reaching up with my walking-cane, full stretch, I could touch only two of the seven ears. One was a foot above my reach; I pulled down that and brought it along for my agricultural friend above alluded to, with some of those pumpkin-seed.

Mr. Fickas showed us a heap of fine Irish potatoes—the second crop of this year; various kinds of pulse, cabbages, tomatoes, etc. But to the pumpkin. It was weighed with the same steelyards, and drew down one hundred and ninety-nine pounds. Pull it out one notch more! No—the lever droops at that, and Tedford is looking on. Its circumference, eight feet around stem and blossom; and six and a half feet the other way. Cutting off the vine squarely a hand-breadth above the root, I found its shortest diameter to be two and a quarter inches. Returning, we pass the beet-crop. One (seed planted in May) measured at the earth three feet around, and twelve inches above the earth three and a half feet around. Mr. Fickas and a lad had made the crop—plowing the corn but once after planting. Hired hands were helping to gather it.

This region lies lower than the village of Santana, and employs no irrigation; water from the mountains sweeps under it, and instead of raining from above it rains from beneath. They prefer it should not come down at all. There has been no rain-fall for months, and the surface of the ground is dusty; but by scraping with the foot moisture is reached. In the settlement was an artesian well, forty-two feet deep, and pouring out a considerable volume of water, eleven feet high, through a three-inch pipe. Another artesian well of twenty-four feet depth was doing an humbler business. It seems easy to get them. Our ordinary falls of rain would render this land uninhabitable. One would expect it to be sickly; but with mountain air on one side and sea breezes on the other, they claim to enjoy health, and their looks agree thereto.

THE Richmond Christian Advocate of November 14 says: Bishop Doggett returned home, for a short time, after holding the Tennessee and Holston Conferences. He reports great prosperity in these Conferences, which was shown in the large number of young men admitted on trial. In the former fifteen candidates were presented—in the latter twenty-one. We trust the same advance on what we did last year will be seen in all the Conferences. We greatly need more workmen, and we should earnestly pray that God would thrust them forth.

THE Mississippi Annual Conference will meet at Brandon on Wednesday, the eleventh day of December next, and we are authorized to say that there will be a committee at the depot on the arrival of the trains, on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, to consign ministers to the places selected for them during their stay.

THANKFUL.

This is Thanksgiving day, so appointed by the President of the United States, and we suppose it will be duly observed. In other years it has been the occasion for a great deal of political preaching, especially among the Northern preachers—a perversion of the day, no doubt, but the fruitful germ and beginning of much evil. If the day can be observed religiously, not politically, the gospel preached, the people duly informed of their manifold mercies, and their gratitude elicited, it will be well. The Governor of Louisiana, we believe, has issued no echo to the proclamation of President Grant. Perhaps there may be some scruples on the score of States rights; the matter may have been overlooked by the Governor; or, as the national executive has assumed the prerogative of fixing the day, he may have concluded that nothing was needed from him. But it makes no difference. There is reason to pray and praise, to give thanks unto the Most High, and to bring our thank-offerings. As the ADVOCATE goes forth to-day we trust that our readers are counting up the blessings of Providence, worshiping in their several sanctuaries, and enjoying the turkeys and other good things usually provided on such occasions.

LAST WEEK we gave Bishop McTyeire's address delivered at the Pacific Methodist College, located at Santa Rosa, California. The Pacific Methodist of October 31 contains an excellent wood cut of the college building. If the picture does not flatter, it is an elegant and imposing structure, three stories high, with a Mansard roof and handsome cupola. Dr. Fitzgerald is agent for the college, and also corresponding editor of the Pacific Methodist. Both the college and the paper are the handsomest in their line belonging to our church, and Dr. Fitzgerald is the worthy representative of these most important interests.

LAST HOURS of MERLE D'AUBIGNE.

A lady, writing to the London Record, gives the following account of the last hours of D'Aubigne:

Immediately upon the conclusion of the Conferences he resumed his professional labors, and lectured regularly for three weeks. He delivered his last lecture on Saturday, October 19, within forty hours of his death. On Saturday he was at the Pelisserie church, where he partook of the communion, and on leaving the church, before the rest of the congregation, he said "that he did not wish to hear the voice of men, Jesus having spoken to his heart." He spent the afternoon and evening at home with his wife and five of his children, choosing for their evening reading the Missionary Intelligence published at Lausanne by our brethren of the Canton de Vaud. He conducted the family worship as usual, after which he vividly enjoyed the singing of two well-known English hymns: "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and "Come, thou long-expected Jesus!" which prayer, in his case, was to be granted before the next morning's light. He then dictated to his son a letter for Semaine Religieuse (one of our weekly papers,) upon the death of the Countess of Shaftesbury. This was his last act. Working to the very last hour in his Master's service, he retired to rest in his usual health and in good spirits, his heart full of kindness for all around him, and remarking simply about some passing occurrence, "that the things of this world had no longer a claim upon him." He fell asleep, and before morning his soul had cast off the earthly coil.

BISHOP McTYEIRE.—Bishop McTyeire, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, left San Francisco November 4, and reached Nashville, safe and sound, November 11. Is not that a quick transit? He came by way of Omaha, and spent a Sunday at Louisville, preaching a sermon in Walnut street. He brought us a section of a bunch of grapes (how big that Eshcol bunch must have been we should like to see!) the most luscious that ever regaled our palate. We want a hamper of them! The Bishop is full of the Pacific, and we shall have to open our columns wide for his relief—and for the delectation of our readers.

SHE that riseth late in the morning must be in a hurry all day, and scarce overtaketh her business at night.

LITTLE WRONGS done to others are, in their ultimate consequences, great injuries inflicted upon ourselves.

Annual Meeting of the General Missionary Committee, M. E. Church (North.)

On Thursday, the fourteenth instant, the General Missionary Committee met in New York, in annual session, to make appropriations for the enlargement and support of our missionary operations, in the home and the foreign fields, for the year 1873. We are happy to lay before our readers an extended report of the doings of the committee up to the close of the session of Friday afternoon.

All the Bishops, missionary secretaries and members of the committee were present.

The report of the treasurer, Dr. Carlton, showed that at the beginning of the fiscal year, November 1, 1871, there was a balance in the treasury of $23,987.88; that the receipts from that date up to the corresponding date of 1872 amounted to $661,056.60; that the disbursements during the same period reached $598,647.63; and that there is now, therefore, in the treasury a balance of $86,396.85. From this balance, however, is to be deducted drafts for the East Indian mission, which had not been presented when the report was made up, but have been called for since—$12,447. Deducting also from this balance the amount on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year, the increase of collections for 1872, over the previous year, will be found to be $49,961.97, including an extra special collection to relieve the treasury from a former indebtedness of $21,000.

After the reading of this report, and a review of the missionary work, with its needs for the coming year, a motion was made to base the appropriations upon an income of $800,000. After considerable debate this proposition was agreed to.

BISHOP PIERCE.—Just as we are going to press, says the Southern Christian Advocate of November 20, we are refreshed with a brief visit from our beloved Bishop, who spends a few hours in Macon in transitu for Hawkinsville, Georgia, where he is to dedicate a church edifice on Sunday, the seventeenth. The Bishop has returned from the West without any visible signs of injury from the hard work of conducting four Conference sessions, and is looking as well as we have seen him for many years. Our readers will rejoice with us in the promise he has kindly given to furnish, at an early day, some letters for the Advocate. We are gratified to learn from the Bishop that recent intelligence from his venerable father, Dr. Lovick Pierce, reports him in improving health and genial spirits. He has been suffering for several weeks from a severe attack of illness, and his numerous admirers and friends will rejoice in his improvement, and join in ardent prayers that he may be spared to the church yet many years.

BRO. D. AYRES, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of November 20, called in last Saturday and told us that the brick work on the walls of St. James will be resumed as soon as the weather moderates. The carpenters are at work, and he hopes the room will be ready for services before the close of the year. He expects the Sunday school to meet in its room by Christmas. The seats have been ordered from Chicago, and the carpet and gaslights will be in their place by the time the house is ready for service. Bro. Ayres, whose whole soul is given to the erection of this building, says that he expects not only to see it completed, but to witness a glorious revival within its walls, in which hundreds will be converted. Let us join our venerable brother in his prayer that he may see the desire of his heart.

DR. KELLEY is carrying forward special services at McKendree church night after night, with encouraging success. He admitted over a dozen into full communion on Sunday morning, after a sensible and fervent discourse on the conditions, obligations and advantages of church membership. The Sunday school has been reoffiered—Messrs. T. Anderson and C. D. Elliott are the superintendents. Addresses were delivered—one by Dr. Green—on the occasion, and the year opens with good prospects. Some two hundred members of the school are communicants. We have rarely enjoyed the services of the sanctuary more than last Sunday.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

REVIVAL IN PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA. Thursday night witnessed one of the most remarkable scenes at Central church that ever occurred in Portsmouth. It was literally a pentecostal shower of divine grace. There were fifty penitents crowding around the altar, and twenty-six of the number were happily converted. Central church, formerly Wesley chapel, is noted for extensive revivals, but nothing like the present has happened within the memory of the oldest. connection.—Norfolk Journal.

SHIRTS.—Colonel S. N. Moody, after his trip to the East and to Europe, is again at his well-known depot of gentlemen's furnishing goods, corner of Canal and Royal streets. His taste and acknowledged skill in selecting the many articles comprised in his varied stock make it certain that such novelties will be displayed as are worthy of his reputation and the attention of his numerous friends and customers. His store has been entirely refurnished during the past summer. The fixtures are really elegant, and every convenience has been supplied. His stock now comprises the celebrated champion shirts, six for $9, and shirts of every style up to the richly embroidered, seasonable underwear, English hosiery, an endless variety of neckwear, toilet articles, etc., and all at moderate prices. Country buyers should by all means give Colonel Moody a call. See advertisement, which appears in this issue.

FRANKLIN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.—As will be seen by the following dispatch from the president to the general agents, this company has suffered comparatively little from the Boston fire:

LEXINGTON, KY., Nov. 12, 1872.

TO OUR PATRONS: Our president telegraphs us the Franklin's Boston books have been examined, and her losses sum up less than half a million dollars! This will leave her a capital and surplus of $3,000,000, and she ranks the No. 1 of the United States.

J. W. COCHRAN & SON,
General Agents.

The general agent in this city is Mr. Douglas West, No. 153 Common street, one of our best and most capable citizens.

THE La Perle Manufacturing Company, of No. 90 Chambers street, merits the attention of the female portion of the community. Their manufactured rubber goods, suitable to the various wants of ladies and children, are of the best quality and pattern. The company has spared no expense in having the different articles cut with accuracy, so that there may exist no necessity for alterations. All can be fitted without inconvenience or trouble. See the company's advertisement in another column.

SASH, BLIND AND DOOR STEAM FACTORY AND LUMBER YARD.—We direct attention to the advertisement of George Purves' large sash, blind and door steam factory, corner of St. Charles and Clio streets. We take pleasure in recommending this establishment to the patronage of our friends. Doors, blinds, sash, rough and dressed lumber and all the articles of house-building on hand and for sale at the lowest market prices.

THE St. Charles nursery, by James E. Waldo & Co., contains a fine assortment of fruit and ornamental trees, evergreens, flowering shrubs, roses, greenhouse and bedding plants, etc, all in great profusion. Bouquets and floral designs made to order. Our readers will receive satisfactory attention to orders intrusted to the care of Messrs. Waldo & Co. Their city depot is at 122 Camp street.

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS.—At the corner of St. Charles and Girod streets is situated the granite and marble works of George Stroud, successor to the old-established firm of John Stroud & Co. The great experience of the proprietor and the extensive appliances at hand insure complete work. Particular attention given to orders from the country. See advertisement elsewhere.

MCCANDLISH, CHRISTIAN & CO.—The above firm, having recently opened their establishment at 36 Camp street, have a stock entirely fresh, and of the latest styles and improvements, in wares and household utensils. They are deservedly popular, always obliging, and we take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to their advertisement, which appears in this issue.

PURE SUGARS, MOLASSES AND SIRUPS. We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement, in another column, of A. Thomson & Co., 48 Tchoupitoulas street, one of our most reliable and extensive dealers in Louisiana and foreign sugars, molasses and sirups.

C. W. ROTH, family grocer, 175 Poydras street, advertises, in this issue, a large stock of groceries, teas, etc., delivered free of charge to any part of the city.

MESSRS. NAVIA & OFFNER offer for sale a large stock of China, crockery and glassware, in every variety, at No. 174 Canal street.

DRUG STORE FOR SALE.—The drug store corner of Canal and Magazine streets is for sale. For terms apply to A. G. Brice, Esq., 23 Commercial Place, or to Dr. S. C. Russell, 159 Canal street, or to D. P. Albers, on the premises.

CARRIAGE REPOSITORY, 54 AND 56 BARONNE STREET.—We recommend to the attention of our readers the advertisement of D. M. Hollingsworth, carriage repository, Nos. 54 and 56 Baronne street. It is a most reliable house.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS, corner of Magazine and St. Andrew streets, have a large assortment of dress goods, flannels, blankets, etc. They solicit country trade. See their new advertisement elsewhere.

T. W. BOTHICK, undertaker, corner of Camp and Delord streets, is worthy the confidence and patronage of our citizens. Personal attention is given to orders intrusted to his care.

LEBLANC & BECK, coopers, Nos. 23 and 24 Front street, have on hand sugar hogsheads, molasses barrels, half barrels, kegs, hoop poles, etc. Orders promptly attended to.

CISTERN BUILDER.—Those in want of cisterns will observe the advertisement of F. A. Zansler, No. 437 St. Charles street.

WILLIAM BOHNE, No. 1 Carondelet street, practical and scientific optician.

CARONDELET HOUSE, 88 Carondelet street. See advertisement elsewhere.

Married.

October 31, 1872, by the Rev. James E. Bradley, at the home of the bride, Mr. L. F. SMITH, of Tensas parish, Louisiana, and Miss CORNELIA MCGAUGHEY, daughter of the late Rev. William G. McGaughey.

By Rev. B. F. Alexander, November 14, 1872, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Hubbub Hudson, in the parish of Tensas, State of Louisiana, Mr. JOHN W. REGISTER to Miss MARY N. HUDSON.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Avoid Consumption.—No enemy to the human race is more to be dreaded and is more insidious in its approaches than the too fatal destroyer of health and happiness of myriads—"Consumption in its ghastly form." The duty of all is to guard against its first advances. This may be done by the timely use of Dr. Tutt's Expectorant.

BOSTON, February 9, 1870.

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: Will you please inform me of what druggist, in New York, I can get your Expectorant, as I can use some of it to advantage, having seen the effect of it on a friend of mine? I am fully satisfied that it has but to be tried to establish its merits. It works like magic. What is your wholesale price, delivered in New York? Let me know where it can be had for the present in New York, and I will communicate further with you at another time. Very truly yours, W. H. BARRON, no28 2t 96 Summer street.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye is Sold Everywhere.

Messrs. J. H. Zeilin & Co.—Gents: I am directed by my uncle, Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, to say to you that he is inclined to believe that he has derived some benefit from the use of Simmons' Liver Regulator, and that he wishes to give it a further trial. You will therefore please send to his address two more bottles by express, C. O. D. no28 1t

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by PRICE'S CELEBRATED AROMATIC STOMACH BITTERS is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositaries, but the cases actually relieved by PRICE'S BITTERS will live

"Within the book and volume of the brain,
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such, indeed, is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters—no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh, prolific fields that heaven sows for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it fails with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

"THE CHRISTIAN GRACES."	FAITH. HOPE. CHARITY.

And now abideth faith, hope and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

Nothing has appeared in religious art for a long time so pure and tender and beautiful as this new picture. The grouping of the figures is grace itself, and the countenances of such heavenly sweetness that it seems as if the artist must have seen them in a vision.

This rare and elegant $5 line and stipple steel engraving is sent free to every subscriber to ARTHUR'S ILLUSTRATED HOME MAGAZINE for 1873. Price of Magazine, $2.50 a year; sample numbers, 15 cents.

Local CANVASSING AGENTS wanted everywhere. Large commissions and territory guaranteed. Send for agents' confidential circular. You can hardly show the Christian Graces to any person of taste or religious feeling without getting a subscriber. Address
T. S. ARTHUR & SON,

WHAT IS BEAUTIFUL.

'Tis beautiful to live on earth,
To work, to watch and pray,
To feel the ties of love and hope
Grow stronger day by day.

'Tis beautiful to look within,
And watch the wares of thought
That come and go in ceaseless tides,
By Truth and Fancy taught.

'Tis beautiful to love and trust
The friends that round us live—
To look with pity on the weak,
And all their faults forgive.

'Tis beautiful to trust in God,
To feel our souls grow strong,
And know that every day we strive
To triumph o'er some wrong.

'Tis beautiful to die, when life,
With all its duties done,
Drifts on, as drifts a summer cloud
To greet the setting sun.

It will be beautiful to pass
On to "the better shore,"
And in its "many mansions" meet
The loved and lost of yore.

It will be beautiful to dwell
With them on love's high plains;
All things are beautiful, my child,
That God for us ordains.

Young Folks' Rural.

Reward.

BY NEIL FOREST.

"My Father will love him."—St. John xiv. 23.

A little boy once went into a toy store to buy marbles; the shopman gave him one too many. He did not discover this till he was nearly home. Then he found out that he not only had one too many, but that the extra one was an agate.

Of course all boys know that agates are worth more than common marbles, and this boy knew he had only paid for the common kind. So it was clearly his duty to take back the agate.

He had been carefully taught what was right and what was wrong, and he had also read a great many books, in which the good boy was always rewarded and the bad boy punished. He reasoned in this way to himself:

"I'll take back this agate, because it's right to do so, and very likely the shopman will say I can keep it for my honesty. At any rate, he will praise me for being good and honest."

So he hurried back to the store, and arrived there panting and breathless with the haste he made, his cheeks glowing and his black eyes as bright as gold buttons.

"You made a mistake and gave me an agate," said he, handing it to the man.

"Oh! did I?" said the man coolly, and, taking it from the boy's hand, he popped it back into the drawer, and went on reading his newspaper without further remark.

The boy felt as if somebody had thrown a glass of cold water in his face.

He was disappointed and surprised and provoked.

"He is a mean man!" said he, leaving the store indignantly.

"He ought to have given it to me, or at least to have praised me!"

And he walked home very much out of temper.

But this circumstance made him think, and, after he had thought for awhile, he made up his mind that life was not like a story book, and the way to live was not with the idea in our heads that we should be rewarded for doing our duty.

If we were to expect to find every one rewarded for doing his duty we should be disappointed and provoked as that boy was.

For we often see good people suffering, either from sickness or poverty, or some other cause. I think, in such cases, we are apt to say:

"Why! how is that? Such good people in such distress! I thought they never had to suffer!"

But stop and think a minute. Suppose that to be honest, kind and good brought us all the riches of this world, how hard we would try to be so, wouldn't we? All the scamps in the world, instead of trying to cheat, would all be trying to be honest. But why? Because they longed to fit themselves for the holy world they hoped to go to when they left this one?

Oh, no, indeed! Not at all! But because they want a good time in this world where they now are. If being good will bring them present pleasure, they will be good. If being bad will do it quicker and better, they will be bad.

Do any of you boys think there is anything generous and noble in the boy who "swapped off" his jackknife for your new ball? He wants the ball, you want the jackknife—that's fair enough. But there's no particular generosity or nobility about that transaction, is there? You wouldn't go home and say: "Oh, see how good he was! He gave me his jackknife!" No, indeed! You would say: "He got as good as he gave."

Well, now, will you tell me what particular merit there would be in your honesty if you got as good as you gave? Why should you expect praise for an honest action or a reward for doing your duty?

Sometimes the rewards are great for acting nobly in this world. An ambitious man is often rewarded by receiving applause, and that applause is his reward; he is like the little boy with the marble, who wanted the shopman to praise him. But then, again, there are many men who have acted equally well and never received any applause at all. The general of an army gets the glory of a victory; but the poor foot soldier, whose bravery has been astonishing, is not even heard of.

But which is the most noble—the general who knows that his fame shall ring through the world, or the soldier who does his duty simply because it is his duty and his country needs him? That country may never even hear of him, but that's no matter; he is willing to give all he has of strength and courage to help the good cause, because it is a good cause.

I call that man the hero, don't you?

On your way through the world, if you met with perfect success, you would love the world more and more; if you gained honor and wealth and rank, because you did your duty, you would be well content never to leave so sunny and serene a life.

But this world is not all we ought to want. The one to come will be infinitely more bright and beautiful than this. That is what we are pressing forward to. That is what we are fitting ourselves for. If we were content with the pleasures of this world, and never cared for our heavenly home, we should be like the Indians, who were willing to sell all their beautiful country, with its forests and mountains, its streams and hunting grounds, for a few glass beads, looking glasses, bright trinkets and warm blankets.

How silly it seems to us, does it not, to exchange one for the other?

Yet we are sillier far, if we are content with this world and do not strive for a better. But a good many of us are naturally silly. Therefore I think it is an excellent thing that matters are so arranged for us that we do not get quite all we want and are never entirely satisfied; that if we do right we learn not to expect a reward, and if we do expect one we are disappointed.

There is a higher motive for well doing than a selfish one. Our Savior said: "The Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please him."

This was the object of the Savior's life—to do always those things that pleased his Father. Jesus is our example in all things. He shows us the way to a glorious reward. What is this reward? The love and protection of our Heavenly Father. It is no matter whether we receive an earthly reward or not, if we have the love of God! Oh, that is what no one can describe!

Perhaps you never stop to think what it is to have the love of your earthly father; and yet, if he were taken from you and could no longer support you—if you had to make your own way in a hard world, working early and late, never taking rest or pleasure, never having a home to come to when you were sick and sad—I think you would remember that father's loving care, and long for it, and for all the rest and comfort and happiness it gave you.

Well, now, think for a moment what it would be to lose the love of God! No! we can't think of it—it would be too dreadful. To become more and more hopeless, more and more wretched, more and more lonely, till life goes out, and leaves us shuddering alone in the dreadful dark! Oh, the horror, the agony of being without the love of God! We cannot think of that!

Thank God, we need not; for nothing can separate us from that love.

That love was lonely that we never need be lonely; it was betrayed that we might never be forsaken; it was tortured that we might smile; it was crucified that we might live.

It wore a crown of piercing thorns that we might wear crowns of light; it wore the purple robe of scorn that we might walk in white; it endured scoffing, shame and agony that we might have joy forever.

Children, why should Jesus, why did Jesus do all this for us?

Because he loved us.

Now answer this question: Why should we try and do our duty, as Christ has shown it to us? I think you will not be long in finding the answer: "Because we love him."

Yes! that is the higher motive I spoke of.

"My God, I love thee, not because
I hope for heaven thereby;
Nor yet because if I love not
I must forever die.
But, oh, my Jesus! thou didst me
Upon the cross embrace;
For me didst bear the nail- and spear,
And manifold disgrace;

"And griefs and torments numberless,
And sweat of agony,
E'en death itself, and all for one
Who was thine enemy!
Then why, O blessed Jesus Christ,
Should I not love thee well?
Not for the sake of winning heaven,
Or of escaping hell;

"Not with the hope of gaining aught;
Not seeking a reward;
But as thyself hast loved me,
O ever-loving Lord!
Even so I love thee and will love,
And in thy praise will sing:
Solely because thou art my God
And my Eternal King."

Housekeepers' Department.

Dr. Hull asserts in the Prairie Farmer that the simple use of soft soap, put on hot, is quite as effectual against the borer, for the exclusion of the moth from laying her eggs in the bark, as the carbolic soap, and not one-eighth as expensive.

A Quick Pudding.—Bring a quart of milk to the boiling point in a farina kettle, or a pail set into boiling water; add a small tenspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of rice, or wheat flour, wet smooth with cold milk. Stir this in as soon as the milk boils. Stir it a few minutes till perfectly smooth, and let it remain in the outside vessel of boiling water half an hour. Be sure and keep the water in receiver or saucepan boiling around the inner one hard all the time. Eat with butter and sugar, or thick cream and sugar.

This is very healthful—especially in the summer—and invaluable for invalids, or children suffering with summer complaint. When used as a remedy or preventive it should boil longer—say one hour.

Custard Without Eggs.—To one quart of new milk one teaspoonful of rennet-wine, or a small piece of rennet, a little lemon, nutmeg or vanilla, or any spice you prefer, and one tablespoonful of sugar to each quart of milk. If too sweet the milk will not set firmly or quickly. Stir all together, and set by stove or near the fire; cover closely. It should begin to stiffen in an hour. If it does not, add more wine or rennet. When firm, before the whey separates, take out the piece of rennet if the skin was used, and set on ice till dinner. To be eaten with sugar and rich cream. Nutmeg is always an improvement, even if lemon or vanilla is used.

The wine-rennet is nicer than simply the skin, and it is a good idea to keep a bottle of wine with a piece of rennet in always on hand, as it is often desirable to have it ready.

Bleeding of Grape Vines.

A correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle recommends as preferable to the method of placing a potato on the freshly-cut end, to stop bleeding in grape vines: to use flexible collodion, which has been found so thorough a styptic for wounds of the human body. Two dressings were given with the end of a feather, thoroughly covering the wound, twice in the course of a few minutes, the third or final coat being put on about half an hour afterward, when the cut was completely sealed up, and in the course of a few minutes became quite hard, so that there was not the least sign of any bleeding. In the course of ten days the vines grew away strongly and vigorously, and have since continued to do so. Some choice pelargoniums were also cut down and dressed twice: this was quite sufficient to heal the wound, and in the course of three or four days the eyes were starting again, showing great vigor. It was found equally efficient with Aphelandra, Leopoldii, Euphorbia, Jacquiniæflora and Euphorbia, and all the tribe of plants that bleed at the same rapid rate; it was found necessary to have a small piece of sponge to wipe off the milky juice, so as to get the collodion to adhere, and they require to be gone over as many times as the vines.

New Use of Olive Oil.

It is proposed to employ olive oil for the purification of gases, as a substitute for sulphuric acid, water, etc., previously used for that purpose. The oil is put into a Woulf bottle, either alone or associated with pumice stone, and the gas to be purified is brought in contact with as much surface as possible. The oil is said to be particularly effective in removing the disagreeable empyreumatic odor that often accompanies carbonic acid, when made from impure limestone, and has thus an application in the manufacture of mineral water. It can also be used to separate some of the hydro carbon gases that contaminate the ammoniacal liquors of the gashouse. We understand that M. Mallett employs it for this purpose in his process of obtaining ammonia directly from these gas liquors. There are other manufactures in which this property of the oil might be advantageously tried, if the first cost of the article does not stand in the way. The oil can be used a number of times, as the more volatile impurities which it has absorbed can be expelled by heat. In course of time, however, it may become too impure for use as a purifier, in which case it can be worked up in blacking, or as a lubricator.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

Salt for Quince Trees.

Where the land is not too wet, nor subject to heavy overflow, on or near the margins of some of our salt-marshes, would be a favorable place for planting the quince—a fruit very undeservedly neglected. We have used coarse salt as a top-dressing for the quince, with very decided and marked benefit; and we are glad to find that our friend, "E. T. C.," of San Lorenzo, California, has been equally successful. He says:

"I have about sixty trees, which are now five years old, until for the past three years have blossomed full, and when the fruit became as large as a hazelnut would all fall off. In the autumn of 1857 I applied salt at the roots of one-half of them, and the result was that I had a good crop of fine fruit from the trees which were salted, while those without salt produced not one, although they all blossomed and set fruit alike, and were of the same variety and on similar soil—a deep sandy loam.

"Another remarkable feature connected therewith is that before the application of salt the trees were evergreen, the leaves not falling until new ones came out in the spring; and those that were not salted still maintain that feature, while those that received the salt shed their leaves last fall at the time of other fruit trees."

A Refreshing Beverage.

Dr. Waller Lewis, in describing the precautions against cholera adopted at the general post-office in London, says: "The men employed in sorting letters and newspapers suffer much from thirst, especially in the hot weather, and consequently drink much water while engaged in their duties. Although the post-office is supplied with excellent water, much diarrhœa was, nevertheless, the result of this practice. To remedy this the officers, clerks and men of all classes have of late been supplied from the medical department with a most agreeable drink, which not only assuages the thirst, but has, moreover, strong antiseptic and anti-diarrhœa properties. It is called orangeade, and is thus composed: Take of dilute sulphuric acid, concentrated infusion of orange peel, each twelve drachms; sirup of orange peel, five fluid ounces. This quantity is added to two imperial gallons of water. A large wineglassful is taken for a draught, mixed with more or less water, according to taste. The officers drank this with pleasure. It is being consumed in large quantities daily, and I am convinced it will be the means of warding off a great deal of sickness."

Watering Plants.—One of the most important points in window gardening is watering. There should be plenty of cracks in the bottom of the pot so as to let the water pass off rapidly, and thus insure perfect drainage. This is one of the few rules without any exception, as there is not a single plant suitable for window culture which will flourish if the water be allowed to stagnate in the bottom of the pot.

A Housekeeper tells us that dried string-beans are very excellent in winter. Cut the beans up in the usual lengths, dry them, put them in a bag. In winter soak them, and cook them in the usual way.—Hearth and Home.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College..... $60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department..... 40 00
Contingent expenses..... 5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This Institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

N. JENKINS'
ANNIHILATOR.

A PURELY VEGETABLE COMPOUND, whose extraordinary virtues, in these painful diseases, are attested by certificates from many prominent citizens of every section of the country.

No medicine of the century has attracted as much attention.

Of the many to whom the proprietor is authorized to refer, may be mentioned the following well-known gentlemen:

Rev. Foster I. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana.
Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.
Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, New Orleans, La.
Rev. J. B. Walker, Galveston, Texas.

Whitworth Female College,
AT BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

THE CONTINUED SUCCESS OF THIS INstitution is one of the best evidences of its merit. During the past term there were in attendance two hundred and twenty-nine pupils.

The members of the Faculty—eleven in number—are selected on account of their ability to teach.

Prof. EICHARDT, Music Director, has few equals.

Madame JULIUS, a Parisian lady of eighteen years' successful experience as a teacher, has been engaged to take charge of the French and Ornamental Department.

The very best care is taken of our pupils, both as to health and manners. Rules are provided for all.

No extravagance in dress is allowed.

The good health of Brookhaven is proverbial. Pupils from the miasmatic regions of Louisiana and Mississippi find this as healthful a school as can be found anywhere.

The charges are believed to be lower than in any school in the Southwest where similar advantages are afforded. Only from $230 to $265 for all expenses, excepting music, French and the ornamental branches.

No expense is spared in purchasing the most approved apparatus, maps, charts, etc., and all necessary school furniture.

Brookhaven is located on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, 128 miles from the city.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets in a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as Something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and expositions are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THIRD EDITION.

GOD WITH US,

Or the Person and Work of Christ, with an Examination of the "Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr. Bushnell. By Aleph Hovey, D. D., president of Newton Theological Seminary. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

CONTENTS. Part I. The Person of Christ. The Deity of Christ. The Humanity of Christ. The Unity of Christ.

Part II. The Atonement as Related to God. The Atonement as Related to Man.

Part III. "The Vicarious Sacrifice" of Dr Bushnell. The Fundamental Principles of the Work. The Interpretation of the Language of Scripture, etc.

A thorough, interesting and very timely work.

Dr. W. R. Williams, of New York, writes to the publishers:

"I have read carefully, throughout the work of Dr. Hovey, 'God With Us.' It seems to me a clear, succinct and admirably cogent book; well timed, and not easily answered."

Dr. Caldwell, of Providence, Rhode Island, writes:

"I have just been reading Dr. Hovey's 'God With Us,' and with the greatest interest. The treatment of the subject is very fair, just, clear, and will relieve many minds obscured by speculations on the subject. The style is remarkably vivid and animated for a theological treatise. It is the best of Dr. Hovey's works."

A CHOICE BOOK. SECOND EDITION.

IN CHRIST.

Or the Believer's Union with his Lord. By Rev. A. J. Gordon, pastor of the Clarendon Street Church, Boston. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A volume full of the "seeds of things," fresh, vigorous and instructive. To those "looking into Jesus" this volume will be intensely interesting, and prove refreshing as "water to a thirsty soul."

The Sunday Courier says: "This book comes well up to its divine theme. We do not remember, since Thomas a'Kempis, a book so thoroughly imbued with great personal love of Christ, and such longing desire to bring men into like love of our Lord and Master as this. * * * This book has, beside its spiritual beauty, great literary merit. It is written in that full, rich old style which once was common among good divines, but now is unhappily so rare anywhere."

The Boston Globe says: "It is really a book of 'vital' religion, and which is at the same time 'sound' in doctrine. We make the distinction, because doctrinal soundness is often accompanied with spiritual dryness. Mr. Gordon is all alive. He is intensely 'orthodox,' but he is also intensely human. As a writer he is both fervid and pointed."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.).

The weather has been clear and pleasant. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. The Agricultural Bureau has caused a more general tendency to raise crop estimates to its figures of 3,450,000 bales, but some parties contend that this amount is short of what the text of the report indicates—that is, 12½ ₱ cent. increase in acreage, and 16 ₱ cent. in condition.

The river is 14 feet 1 inch below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-second instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	17,428
Lake.....	82
Tennessee.....	433
Mobile.....	3,352
Texas.....	800
Total.....	22,095

On Saturday the demand was slack throughout the day, and prices exhibited a good deal of irregularity, closing at a decline of ⅛@¼c. in good ordinary, ¼c. in low middling, and ⅛c. in the higher grades. The sales were confined to 3,000 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with much more spirit, partly, it was inferred, on orders to fill contracts, and as much changed hands during the morning as the entire business of Saturday, while, under the competition among buyers, prices ruled in favor of sellers, without any quotable advance. Later in the day, stocks having considerably accumulated, and buyers being unwilling to go on at any advance, factors found it necessary to meet the demand more freely, and the movement became unusually animated, resulting in the heaviest business of the season, the sales summing up a trifle over 12,000 bales, which was 3,600 bales in excess of the heaviest previous business—8,400 bales, on the seventh instant. The market closed firm without any quotable variation. On Tuesday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and although the movement was checked by the heavy business of the previous day, having materially reduced the supply on sale, yet 5,600 bales changed hands, at firm prices, during the morning, but rather easier subsequently, without, however, showing any quotable falling off. The advantage, nevertheless, was manifestly on the side of the buyer, who in many cases obtained a concession of ¼c., but still keeping within the previous range. Offers of 18¼c. were accepted for a style of low middling which could hardly have been bought on Monday under 18⅜c. We noticed the same feature with regard to strict good ordinary and some other grades.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 293,257 bales, against 219,460 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 237,684 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 7,755 to Great Britain, and an increase of 55,426 to France, and of 80,695 to other foreign ports.

We qnote:

SUGAR.—Supplies are coming in more freely. They have commenced to accumulate, and prices have ruled in favor of buyers, showing a decline of ⅛c. ₱ lb. since our last review. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced nearly 1,900 hhds., which were mostly sold at 6@6½c. for inferior, 6¾@7⅛c. for common, 7⅛@8c. for low fair, 8¼@9c. for good fair, 9¼@9½c. for fully fair, 9⅝@10c. for prime, 10⅛c. for choice, 9@10⅛c. for seconds, 10@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11@12c. for low to choice white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the demand was good, and the receipts were sold as landed at firm prices; common 40@45c., centrifugal 40@50c., fair 48@52c., prime 55@56c., strictly prime 57@58c., strictly prime to choice 59@60c. A lot of fancy brought 63c. ₱ gallon. Some half bbls. choice sold at 63c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—On Tuesday 5,000 sacks were sold, in lots, at 59c. for mixed, 60c. for yellow and white, and 61c. ₱ bushel for choice white and yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday the supply was fair, and 2,000 sacks were sold, in lots, at 41@42c. for prime, and 43@44c. ₱ bushel for choice.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the market was quiet, with sales of 560 bags, in lots, at $1.02½@1.07½ ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Saturday a lot of 120 bbls. old mess sold at $14.50 ₱ bbl.; and 55 bbls. sold, in two lots, at $14.62½@14.75 ₱ bbl. On Monday 200 bbls. sold at $14 ₱ bbl., showing a further decline of fully $1 ₱ bbl. since our last review.

BACON.—On Saturday some 40 casks shoulders sold; in lots, at 5⅜@5½c. ₱ lb., and some clear sides at 10c. ₱ lb. Clear rib sides were quoted at 9½c. ₱ lb. On Monday only a retail business was done at ¼c. over the above figures. A lot of 10 casks clear sides brought 10¼c., and 22 half casks shoulders sold at 5½c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—Sugar-cured are jobbing at 16@18c. ₱ lb. for new and old. The season is about over for the old, while the market for the new is unsettled.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The market is dull. Only a retail business is doing.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113¼@113¼ (against 112⅞ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates in both markets.

In silver we have noticed only retail sales. American half dollars are quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars nominal.

ROOT & PLANT

PILLS.

By cleansing the blood and arousing the liver and secretive organs to a healthy action, Dr. Henry's Root and Plant Pills cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Headache, Pain in the Side, Numbness of the Hands and Feet, Dullness, Chilliness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Loss of Appetite, Bilious Dysentery, Kidney Affections, Constipation, Debility, Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Being free from mercury and other poisons, they can be taken at all times and under all circumstances, without regard to diet, business or pleasure.

They stimulate the weakened and distempered parts into healthy action, giving them strength to disburden themselves and throw off the obstructions which are the first cause of disease, without producing either nausea or griping.

All heavy and drowsy sensations, which are the forerunners of direful diseases, such as Apoplexy, Paralytic strokes, etc., are effectually warded off by a few doses of these searching Pills.

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the blood-streaks, the dark greenish color of the halls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh.
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

Price, Twenty-five cents per bottle. Sold by druggists. E. J. HART & Co., Wholesale Agents, 73 75, 77 and 79 Tchoupitoulas street, New Orleans.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1872. NO. 49.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—The Tribune says Mr. Greeley suffers from nervous prostration from the almost total loss of sleep for a month or more, which has affected his nervous system. Within a week he has slept and eaten more.

BOSTON, Nov. 27.—Nine bodies were found in the ruins to-day; five were identified. Nineteen still missing.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—A dispatch has just been received here announcing the death of Mr. Greeley at ten minutes before seven. He was conscious at the time, and passed peacefully away.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—The Tribune issues the following: "Mr. Greeley died very quietly, and without pain, at ten minutes before seven this evening. He was conscious and rational."

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The New York Tribune says: "The melancholy death of the editor and founder of the Tribune, though for a few days it has been expected by his family and intimate friends, falls upon us with all the shock of sudden calamity. He had reached indeed a ripe old age, but time had not laid its withering touch upon his brow. His splendid constitution easily bore the strain of enormous labor; his mind was as fresh and strong and suggestive as in the prime of life. His generous impulses were unchilled by disheartening experience through the trying campaign which has just closed. His physical vigor, his tact, his intellectual vitality, surprised even those who knew him best, and seemed to promise many years of usefulness. It is certain that no history of the most critical period in our national life can be written in which Horace Greeley shall not be a conspicuous figure; but the noblest career in his eyes was that which is given up to others' wants. The successful life was that which is worn out in conflict with wrong and woe. The only ambition worth following was the ambition to alleviate human misery and leave the world a little better than he found it. That he had done it was the consolation which brightened his last days, and assured him he had not lived in vain. It is not for us, in the first hour of our loss, to paint his character or catalogue his virtues. Although for several months we have missed the inspiration of his presence and the guidance of his wise counsel, his spirit has never ceased to animate those chosen to continue his works, and the close bond of sympathy between the chief and his assistants has never been broken.

"We leave his praise to the poor, whom he succored; to the lowly, whom he lifted up; to the slave, whose back he saved from the lash; and to the oppressed, whose wrongs he made his own."

The accounts published of Mr. Greeley's last moments represent him to have been conscious during the day, as usual in cases of inflammation of the brain. His physical suffering was extremely slight, but increased and morbid action of the mind was evident from exterior manifestations. He was asked: "Do you know that you are dying?" Without tremor or emotion he answered: "Yes." Again, when asked if he recognized Mr. Reid, he looked up with immediate recognition, lifted his hand, grasped Mr. Reid's feebly, and said distinctly: "Yes." His last words were: "It is done." His face hardly changed, only settling a little into a look of perfect peace.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, Nov. 30.—The epizootic made its appearance in this city yesterday. A large number of horses and mules are now sick with it. It is feared it will materially interfere with the movement of cotton and other merchandise.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—Both houses organized. Messrs. Colfax and Blaine in their respective chairs.

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill striking from the United States flags and army register all mention of battles with fellow-citizens. He also attempted to call up the civil rights bill, but was stopped by the rules.

The chaplains mentioned Mr. Greeley in their prayers.

The House is considering Mr. Banks' retirement from the chairmanship of the Foreign Committee. The House refused to accept Mr. Banks' resignation.

Pending a resolution regarding the Credit Mobilier, Mr. Blaine called Mr. Cox to the chair, and the resolution, as now before the House, is that the temporary chairman, S. S. Cox (Democrat,) announce the committee.

Both houses have taken a recess to half-past one, when the President's message will be read.

The following resolution was offered by Dawes, and unanimously adopted by both houses:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, That in view of the recent death of Horace Greeley, for whom at the late election more than three million votes were cast for President, that a record be made in the journals of Congress of appreciation for the eminent services and personal purity and worth of the deceased, and of the sad impression created by his death following a keen family bereavement.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The Tribune editorially says the "electoral colleges of States voting for Mr. Greeley should cast them for Grant."

Mr. Beecher, in a sermon, attributed Mr. Greeley's death to a broken heart.

The World claims that the Greeley electoral votes should be cast blank.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Mr. Colfax has gone, and the President leaves to-night, to attend Mr. Greeley's funeral to-morrow.

Judge Nelson, of the Supreme Court, has resigned.

The appointment of Wood Hunt, of New York, to the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, in place of Associate Justice Nelson, resigned, is received with satisfaction by those in this city who know him either personally or by reputation.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Mr. Greeley's obsequies promise to be the grandest on record. Chapin's church is being heavily draped; over the pulpit there will be an arch of flowers with the words: "I know that my Redeemer liveth;" and the pew of the deceased is covered with black, with a harp with broken strings occupying the place of Mr. Greeley. The body of the church will be occupied only by the immediate friends of Mr. Greeley and the Tribune employes.

Addresses will be delivered by Beecher and Chapin, and Miss Kellogg will sing: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The situation at Versailles is unchanged. The opinion gains ground that a compromise will be effected. The provinces almost overwhelm President Thiers with cheering words and promises of support.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—Official journals concur in assuring Europe that the German government will respect the will of the people of France in their choice of a form of government and the selection of statesmen to carry it on. It has not the slightest sympathy or partisanship for either Thiers or the Assembly.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—Mary Somerville, mathematician and astronomical writer, is dead.

PARIS, Dec. 2.—There were two long cabinet sessions yesterday. Finally Thiers agreed to remain President if the ministers resumed their portfolios. The ministers consented. It is rumored that General Ducrot is accused of preparing troops to act against the government should a crisis occur.

All the ministers have resigned. Thiers says the only course left him is resignation. Paris is uneasy, and the Monarchists are confident.

PARIS, Dec. 3.—The Assembly will divide into two great parties—the Left and the Right—for the election, on Thursday, of a committee of thirty, proposed by Dufonre. The ministry of the interior was tendered by the President to Dufaire, but he declined it.

Dispatches from all parts of France represent the country as calm; all parties are awaiting the organization of the committee of thirty to be appointed by the Assembly to draw up the law regulating public powers, and prescribing the conditions of ministerial responsibility, as provided for in the resolution of Dupard, adopted on Friday last. The committee will meet on Thursday.

MR. ARCHER M. SHEE, a Roman Catholic, writes to the London Times, declaring his "utter disbelief" of the alleged appearance of the Virgin at Lourdes. He has read the accounts of the "pilgrimages," he says, with "mournful disgust."

"WHAT is that, children?" asked a young pastor, exhibiting to his Sunday school a magic-lantern picture of a poor sinner clinging to the cross towering out of stormy waves in mid-ocean. "Robinson Crusoe!" was the instant reply.

FROM THE WORK.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We commenced a protracted meeting at Bogkin's church on Saturday before the fifth Sabbath in September, and continued it nine days and nights, the result of which was fourteen accessions, and the same number professed conversion. The church was greatly strengthened. We also held protracted services at Caing Creek church, commencing on Saturday before the second Sabbath in October. Here we had a very interesting meeting. There were seven accessions, three or four conversions, and the church revived. We are indebted to Bros. Liverman and Evans, itinerants, and Clark, Gardener and Vinson, locals, for efficient services rendered at these meetings. To God be all the glory.

R. A. SIMLEY, P. C.

TRENTON, SMITH CO., MISS., Nov. 25.

DELHI, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: Our last Quarterly Conference, and the protracted meeting which followed it, have just closed. We had a live conference and a happy meeting, despite the unusually cold weather. Some excellent material was added to the church, and some happy conversions. Bro. Daves was in his place, and discharged his duties with becoming zeal; and we would all vote for his return to us next year.

My people have paid over every dollar of their portion of his salary with cheerful faces; and that is one reason for me to say that they will pursue the same course toward others.

When I came to this work, March 14, 1870, Floyd, Midway and Delhi did not count a membership of over sixty-four. At my last Quarterly Conference, held on the sixteenth instant, there were reported one hundred and sixty-three members—a net increase of ninety-nine members. Eight have been added since. There were but seven copies of your paper taken at the above points at that time. Now there are twenty seven.

We are now in the midst of a protracted meeting at this place—have Bros. Manley and Wright with us. Very truly,

J. E. BRADLEY.

THE NUMBER OF HORSES.

The following, from the Harness and Carriage Journal, will be of interest just now, when so much attention is directed to these most useful animals:

In England there are 2,000,000 of draft and pleasure horses, besides 100,000 agricultural horses. English history records that out of every thirty colts from thoroughbred stock but one proves extra fast. A horse whose pedigree is eight generations in duration, without any base admixture, is considered thoroughbred.

The number of horses in Russia is greater, in proportion to the population, than it is in the greatest horse region of this country, which is Kentucky. Russia has one horse to every three persons, while Kentucky has one horse to about four and a half of its population.

Historical records show that up to 1632 there were no horses in New England; and their introduction into New Netherlands—now New York—occurred during the administration of Gov. Von Twiller, in 1636-38. Trumbull's "History of Connecticut" mentions the horse as accompanying emigrants from Massachusetts to that State, October 15, 1636. The first horse seen in Canada was brought to that country from France, in a ship which arrived at Tadoussac, June 20, 1647.

It is estimated that there are now in this country 8,000,000 of horses, valued at between two and three thousand millions of dollars—a sum ample to pay the national debt. The highest price recorded as actually paid for any one horse was $75,000, though it is said that $150,000 would not have bought Gladiateur at his meridian. In this country Lexington sold for $15,000, and one of his colts has since sold for $40,000; while $50,000 was refused for another. Mambrino Pilot has tempted the offer of $50,000 without success, and Hambletonian, whose death at an advanced age was recently announced, commanded $100,000 a short time before. Dexter brought $33,000. "There are some 70,000 horses in this country," says McClure's recent work; "worth from $3,000 to $10,000 each."

WHAT can we say more for ourselves in our prayers than he has said for us in his promises?

WEEK OF PRAYER.

The officers of different branches of the Evangelical Alliance have issued their annual programme of topics for the Week of Prayer, extending from January 5, 1873, to the twelfth. The following are the subjects selected:

SUNDAY, JAN. 5.—Sermons.—Subject: The foundation, security and universal extension of the Christian church.

MONDAY, JAN. 6.—Devout Acknowledgment.—Remembrance of God's mercies to the nation, to families and to churches; providential and spiritual blessings to ourselves; confession of sin.

TUESDAY, JAN. 7.—Prayer—for Christian churches; their increase in love, activity, fidelity to the truth, and the clearer manifestation of the unity in the faith; for ministers, missionaries and evangelists.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 8.—Prayer—for families; for sons and daughters of Christian parents; for a blessing on home influence, and on the services and ordinances of "the church of God;" for schools, colleges and universities; for children at sea or in foreign lands; for young men in business and professions; for servants, and for all in sickness and tribulation.

THURSDAY, JAN. 9.—Prayer—for nations; for kings and all in authority; for the maintenance of peace; for increase of righteousness; for the spread of religious liberty; for the growth of sound knowledge; for contentment, concord and good will among all classes; for the discernment of God's hand in national judgments, and for the removal of intemperance, immorality and the sins which are a "reproach to any people."

FRIDAY, JAN. 10.—Prayer—for mankind; for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures and the spread of pure literature; for the overthrow of all forms of tyranny and oppression; for the removal of every form of antichrist; for all prisoners and captives, and for the increase of that kingdom which is "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

SATURDAY, JAN. 11.—Prayer—for Sunday schools; for missionary, tract and other religious societies; for the raising up and sending forth of more "laborers into his harvest," and for the removal of hinderances to the spread of the gospel and the conversion of the world.

SUNDAY, JAN. 12.—Sermons.—"Let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and amen."

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

A well-attended meeting was held on Tuesday evening of last week in Brooklyn, for the purpose of awakening general interest in the grand International Conference which will be held in New York and Brooklyn next year.

Dr. Schaff stated that the arrangements for the Conference were rapidly approaching completion, and that the following eminent foreign clergymen had promised, if possible, to attend: From Scotland, Rev. Thomas Guthrie, D. D., William Arnold, David Brown and Profs. Raine and Blaikie; from England, the Dean of Canterbury, Rev. Drs. Leeds, Angus, Harrison, Richie; from Ireland, Rev. Mr. Stevenson; from France, Dr. Pressense, M. Mereau and Pere Hyacinthe.; from Holland, Van Oosterzee; from Italy, Father Gavazzi; and others from Swedish Germany, Switzerland and Russia. The entire number from abroad would be from three to five hundred, and a finer opportunity would never present itself to the residents of New York for giving the representative minds of Europe a wholesome lesson of America. In regard to the meeting the danger was that the council would be too large, and it was therefore proposed to divide the meetings between Brooklyn and New York, so that the residents of both cities would have abundant opportunity to show their hospitality and kindness to the visitors.—New York Christian Advocate, November 21.

THE General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Church (North) report the receipts of the past year at $661,056; disbursements, 590,647; increase of collections over 1871, about $50,000. The pecuniary basis for missionary work for 1873 was made at $800,000; $136,000 was for foreign missions and $70,000 for domestic missions.

A FASHION REPORTER announces that the young man of the period is to be suggestively adorned with a leather cravat with a neat gilt buckle. Won't this have rather a Bow-wowery effect?

VALUABLE GIFT TO WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.—The Lexington (Virginia) Gazette says: "W. W. Corcoran, Esq., of Washington, has within the last week given to this institution $20,000 in six per cent. coupon bonds of the city of Alexandria, Virginia. Our readers may remember that a few months since Mr. Corcoran made a present to the University of the large and valuable library—for its richness in classical literature unequaled by any in the State—of the late N. P. Howard, Esq., of Richmond. This later and still more valuable donation of $20,000 from the same generous source will be welcomed by the friends of our University with feelings of profound gratitude."

PLEASANT.—To be introduced to a man and have him tell you that he always supposed you to be the man whom you dislike above all others.

NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Having just returned from Tuskaloosa, where I made a short visit to the North Alabama Conference, perhaps a few jottings may not be uninteresting.

As I did not arrive until the third day of the session, the business of the Conference had progressed considerably under the excellent leadership of Bishop Doggett. Soon after taking my seat in the Conference room I discovered that I was not among strangers. There, for instance, sat Bro. C. D. Oliver wielding the pen of a ready writer as secretary of the Conference, while the familiar faces of Duncan, McCloud, Curry, Boland, Roberts, West, Kirk, Wilson and others bore proof that I was in the presence of those whom, in other days, I had learned to esteem very highly for their work's sake. The brethren named above seemed in good health, except Kirk, who appeared disabled from rheumatism. May the Lord soon restore him! On Saturday night the anniversary of the Conference Missionary Society was held. Of course Drs. Kelly and McFerrin were the speakers. Dr. Kelly's address was chaste and elegant throughout, with occasional touches of genuine pathos and eloquence. Dr. McFerrin's speech was—well, simply one which my pen refuses to describe. Most of your readers will, however, understand me when I say it was one of the doctor's characteristic addresses, with a hat collection taken up by himself, and an Indian song added. It was announced before we dispersed that $500 had been collected, which, added to the amount reported by the treasurer, made $2 300 in full.

On Sunday, that great day of the Conference feast, the weather was favorable, and Bishop Doggett gave us a rich gospel repast at the Methodist church, while Bros. Kelly and Whitten broke the "bread of life" at the Presbyterian and Baptist churches. Long will the sermon preached by Bishop Doggett live in the memory of those who heard it, for you may be assured that the eloquent preacher "magnified his office," and made "full proof of his ministry."

I heard that Mr. Tyndal was handled in a most satisfactory manner at the Presbyterian church, at the same hour, by Dr. Kelly, of Nashville.

On Monday I visited the Insane Asylum, where Dr. Summers preached the day before, and, as the assistant matron was a former parishioner, was kindly conducted through the different wards, and had things shown and explained as we went. The appearance of the inmates bore ample evidence of careful attention, while the most scrupulous cleanliness and order were apparent at every step. Though I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the superintendent, Dr. Brice, and his excellent wife, yet the thoughtful provision for comfort, everywhere manifested, proves that the asylum, under their care, is indeed a public benefaction.

For the information of your readers allow me to insert the following extract from the columns of the Meteor, a newspaper published and edited within the walls of the asylum:

"The Alabama Insane Hospital, besides the outhouses for various purposes, consists of—1. A center building, sixty by one hundred feet, four stories high, surmounted by a cupola whose apex is ninety feet from the ground. 2 Two immense wings, each nearly four hundred feet long—the one on the east devoted to women, on the west to the men. Each wing is three stories high, and composed of three divisions, or nine distinct wards; in all, eighteen wards, each one hundred and twenty-five feet long by forty in width. The number of patients in the hospital at the present time is three hundred and fifty."

The blessings of God rest upon this noble institution!

Before I close permit me to say that both the church and parsonage buildings at Tuskaloosa have undergone a pretty thorough renovation, and the pastoral labors of Dr. Hamilton have been appreciated by the people of his charge and blessed by the Lord. J. BANCROFT.

HYMN FOR THE BLIND.

They tell us that the stars are bright
Which glisten in the sky;
But vain they shed their heavenly light
Upon the sightless eye.

They tell us of the tints of morn—
Hues of the purple west,
The blossom of the snowy thorn,
The ocean's sparkling breast.

The sun that ushers in the day
The moon so fair and clear—
Shed not upon our eyes a ray
To lighten or to cheer!

But he who made the sun and moon—
Earth, ocean, air and sky—
Hath poured upon our clouded noon
The day-spring from on high.

Our hands can read, our fingers trace
The page of truth and love;
And thus we joyfully embrace
The message from above.

Then let us willingly record
His praise, who maketh known
To our benighted hearts his word,
And seals it as his own.

WALTER HILLMAN'S DENIALS.

Those who have read his denials, as published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of October 10, 1872, will remember he does not deny that I heard in Clinton and its vicinity, when I was there in August last, all that I wrote of him and his school, and the proselyting proclivities of himself and other Baptists there.

Fortunately for me, the Rev. J. J. Smylie, pastor of Raymond circuit, which includes Clinton (if any should deny what was said on the matters mentioned in my article,) was with me in every visit I made to families in and about Clinton at that time, and heard every conversation in which these things were alluded to. He gives me the following statement, viz.:

"RAYMOND, MISS., Nov. 18, 1872.

"REV. H. H. MONTGOMERY—Dear Brother: In reply to your question I would state that when we were in Clinton, last August, I was with you in every family you visited in and around Clinton. I heard the conversations that induced you to write your article on Denominational Schools, published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of September 5, 1872. While with you I heard everything alluded to by you in that article about the Clinton Female Institute, under the presidency of the Rev. Walter Hillman, and believe it to be true.

"Very truly yours,

"J. J. SMYLIE."

Those who have read my article on Denominational Schools, as published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of September 5, may remember that I charged that undue influences had been brought to bear on the daughters of other denominations in Mr. Hillman's school to pervert or proselyte them to the Baptist Church. I say: "It is a Baptist machine for proselyting the children of other denominations to the Baptist Church."

Mr. Hillman tries to make large capital out of what he says is implied in my article, hoping thus to divert the attention of his readers from the main question. Here he flourishes trumpets most wonderfully. The sound and fury may have deceived some of the unwary. The point is that undue influences are brought to bear on young ladies of that school, whose parents or guardians are members of other denominations, to get them into the Baptist Church. Mr. Hillman denies this, and yet in his explanations virtually admits that my charge is true. Let us look after him and a few facts for awhile.

He says: "My course has been identical with that of Dr. now Bishop) Paine while president of LaGrange College." That course was "to allow no young man, a student in the college, to join the Methodist Church without the written consent of the parent or guardian, if they were members of another denomination. Dr. Paine did not keep the steward's hall or the boarding department of his college. Now see how Mr. Hillman departs from this position. He says: "No boarding pupil in the institute, whose parents belong to one denomination, has been permitted to join the church of another denomination without the consent—written, if necessary—of her parent or guardian." To refute this I have information to the contrary. 1. The father of one of the young ladies proselyted during the last term of his school says: "My daughter, who joined the Baptist Church, is one of the most impulsive children she is only a child I ever knew. At the time of the excitement in the Baptist Church in Clinton she wrote repeatedly to both myself and her mother for permission to join the Baptist Church. We both urged her to take time to think—not act hastily. The language used by her, in her letters begging permission to join the (Baptist) church, was not her own. At length Mr. Hillman wrote to me. I wrote him an evasive letter. The child acted from the influence of others. I would prefer seeing my children attach themselves to any other church than the Baptist." 2. The mother of this daughter wrote her a letter, covering six pages of foolscap paper, giving reasons against her joining the Baptist Church. These facts show that a "written consent" was given with a vengeance. These same parents had another daughter there at the same time, who is said to be a stronger Baptist in sentiment than the one who joined the church, but who did not join the Baptist Church because she would not join without the consent of her parents. Nor could she put the construction Mr. Hillman did on her father's letter. Nor have I heard of her joining them yet. 3. I have a letter before me in reference to another Methodist daughter proselyted during the last term at Clinton, in which it is said no consent or permission was given to her to join the Baptist Church. She was urged to "postponement until she could consider," as her mother preferred her joining the Methodist Church. That is one of Mr. Hillman's "written permissions" to join the Baptist Church! 4. I have another letter in reference to a son and daughter being proselyted to the Baptist Church at Clinton—the daughter boarding in the institute. The parents were not consulted nor advice asked, nor was their written consent given; they knew nothing of it till certain clothing were desired, in which to be immersed. Was the course pursued with these children "compelling them to wait till the written consent of their parents could be obtained before joining" the Baptist Church?

In a correspondence which sprung ont of the facts of my first article I pnt the following, with other questions, to Mr. Hillman, viz.: "2. When said daughters of Methodists joined the Baptist Church, during the recent term of your school, did they have such written permit? Do you know that they had? Did you see the letters?" He answers: "2 They had such written permit. I know it. In one case I corresponded directly with the parent, and received myself his permission. In the two other cases I either saw the written permit myself, or had the testimony of others whose veracity I could not doubt." There it is! Can you make the extracts from letters, as given above, chime with Mr. Hillman's denial in his article and his answer to my second question. The softest thing that can be said of Walter is that he is mistaken.

Take the items brought out in the cases I have given (and others could be added,) and I ask: Is not my charge sustained that undue influences are brought to bear on the children of other denominations to proselyte them to the Baptist Church?—that it is a "machine" for that work? See how the teachers dictate letters for children, or write them for children to copy, arguing the ease and giving reasons why they should join the Baptist Church in preference to the Methodist or other churches. Then when these all fail, Walter Hillman comes in with his pen, talents, tact, "influence and authority" to influence the parents to consent or submit to their children joining the Baptist Church. In his article he says: "I have written to the parents myself." In his letter to me he says: "In one case I corresponded directly with the parent." So he was no idle spectator in the effort to slaughter the children of other denominations in the Baptist pool! When others could not move the "machine" fast enough, he was ready and more than willing to give the wheel a turn. "I can do it. If the parent evades so as not to forbid positively, I can work it. We must have that girl into the pool and under the water." So at it he goes, without shame or sense of propriety, or respect for parents, and makes things bend to his "authority,"—for it is mighty. But from the letters I have, and his own admissions, I am confident he did not see a single letter, from parent or guardian, granting or containing a "written permission" to any one of those young ladies or children to join the Baptist Church. And why did he take so much on himself, and so much interest in the matter as to write to those parents? Was that "identical" with the course pursued by Dr. Paine? Was that "respecting the feelings and views of the parents who patronized" him? Was it not a direct insult to those parents—to their judgment and sense, "views and feelings"—for him to write such letters to them? Anybody else, it seems to me or one with the same amount of bigotry, would have regarded such work as beneath the dignity of the president of a college. But he (Hillman can insult them by writing such letters (as if these parents had no sense of Christian duty or judgment in the case,) and then boast of what he has done as something very smart. A whole association of Baptist preachers and delegates can congratulate him for his smart deeds in this respect too.

Mr. Hillman is uneasy because I charge that "he thought it improper for the young ladies to attend the Methodist Church at night on a certain occasion, but thought it very proper and right for them to attend the Baptist Church every night for several weeks in succession." "Such discrimination in granting liberty to attend upon religious meetings in the Methodist Church and in the Baptist Church," he says, is "false." He hurts under the truth of my assertion, which is in the very language of my informant. He feels it. It gives him a pain in a tender place, just as I intended it should when I wrote it. He denies, and then tries to excuse himself under certain subterfuges, viz. 1. The "occasion" referred to in my article, he says, was "a temperance lecture." 2. "I was absent at the time, and the member of the faculty acting in my place refused to grant permission." 3. "Whenever services have been made to conform to the conveniences of the institute, as to season of the year, hours," etc., he allows the young ladies to attend. A friend, in apologizing for him on the "occasion" referred to, says, by way of explanation: "He was not consulted, and could not, therefore, make the necessary arrangements for the young ladies to attend," etc.

But let us look at his subterfuges. 1. "It was a temperance lecture" by a Methodist preacher. Hence no novel thing,—as they are given to fighting whisky and whisky-sellers. But if it had only been by a Baptist preacher it would have been so novel a thing as to have justified his considering it proper for the young ladies to attend, and have allowed them to attend and hear it.

Well, Dr. J. W. Harmon, a Methodist preacher and a lecturer of no mean ability, lectured in Clinton two evenings against intemperance. They had been previously announced, and while Mr. Hillman was at home. The young ladies were not allowed to attend the first evening. The doctor made a special request from the stand that the ladies, young and old, would attend the next evening. But they were not allowed to attend. This occurred the two evenings preceding our quarterly meeting exercises, which were announced at the close of Dr. Harmon's lectures. Yet the young ladies were not allowed to attend our preaching on that night. It was in the week.

On a former occasion—in March, 1871—when we had a quarterly meeting in Clinton, which had been announced at least twice before the time, Mr. Hillman marched out his boarders on Sunday morning, before the second bell had been rung for preaching at the Methodist church, or the doors had been opened for the reception of the congregation, went by the Methodist church and on to the Baptist chapel. The next day he apologized for the absence of all his boarders from our services, as some of them desired very much to attend them. "But the church doors were closed when we came by, and I did not think it prudent to keep them (the young ladies standing in the street till the doors might be opened."

Let us note here: 1. The first bell had been rung, and, as Mr. Hillman's college bell was would take the bell-rope when the doors were left open, the brother who rang the bell closed the doors while he went a little more than one square to get the elements for the Lord's Supper Hence the doors were closed. 2 Mr. Hillman's residence is one square from the Methodist church, and he could hear the bell easily and distinctly, and must, therefore, have known, when he started his boarders, that the second bell had not been rung, and that it was at least twenty or twenty-five minutes before the services would begin. 3. While it had been the custom there previously for the two denominations not to clash in their services on such occasions, yet the Baptists had imported a preacher from Vicksburg for that occasion. 4. It had been circulated through the town that several persons were to be immersed at the Baptist chapel that morning. This, they knew, generally drew the eager crowd. So it does, as any other show does. Mr. Hillman wanted those Pedobaptist girls to hear the harangue that usually precedes the dipping. He wanted them to witness the dipping too. 5. The trick having succeeded so well in the morning in securing a crowd, they postponed the dipping till night, and Walter Hillman and his boarders went to see it. That was too favorable a time to be permitted to pass by unimproved. Keep them from hearing Methodist preaching, and make them witness the dipping in the Baptist pool, and listen to all the insult that may be heaped upon their parents, and the church of their parents, by the performer, when he says no one is in the church of Christ who has not been immersed by a Baptist preacher. The truth is that, notwithstanding what is "indicated in the catalogue" of the school and Mr. Hillman's professions, there has been a studied course pursued by him, and those associated with him, to keep everybody about him and his school from the Methodist church. Any flimsy pretext is seized upon and used so as to hedge up that way, and turn them to the Baptist.

2. He "was absent at the time." If I am not misinformed he was at home the first night Dr. Harmon lectured. But suppose he was away every night of lectures and preaching, is his excuse worth anything? There is a maxim in law: "He who does anything by another does it himself." That "member of the faculty" knew Mr. Hillman's wishes and carried them out. So his subterfuge fails him just at this point. Suppose that "member of the faculty" had seen fit or proper to have a public dance, on wine and card party, while Mr. Hillman was away at that time—would the plea, "I was absent," have quieted the outraged feelings of parents, or satisfied the outraged sense of the community? Such a plea would certainly diminish his pupils. He would be held responsible for having such an agent to act for him in his absence.

3. But he was not consulted, so as to make arrangements, etc. "Whenever the services conform to the conveniences of the institute, as to season of the year, hours," etc., they attend, etc. So if the Quarterly Conference of Raymond circuit should wish to hold one of its sessions at Clinton, one of its regular preaching places, the members must first consult Mr. Hillman as to "the season of the year" if they wish him and his school to attend; and the presiding elder, who has forty-eight quarterly meetings to hold in the year, if he wishes to have Mr. Hillman and his school present, must first consult him as to the time, hours of service, etc., before they are fixed or announced! That is arrogance, or presumption, unheard of in this country before. But how came it about that for several weeks the young ladies of Hillman's school went every night to the services in the Baptist chapel? Was that prearranged, after consultation with Mr. Hillman, by the pastor of that church? Was that "the season of the year" which made it "proper" for them to attend, and be kept from their studies so much? At that season the water was not so cold (leaving out the question of purity,) and more of them might be got into the pool and under the water! Hillman knew how to arrange it and work the great "machine for making Baptists."

But Mr. Hillman seems anxious to make the impression that "young Baptist preachers" did not visit the institute during that meeting, or—at other times. "I never thought it right and proper" for them to come: I never gave any young preacher such permission. Those four-o'clock meetings were "inquiry meetings appointed for ladies only." And yet he enumerates several gentlemen who were present. If those gentlemen attended, is it not quite probable, if not certain, that others were there—even the young preachers? "The object of those meetings," he says, "was to converse with those who were anxious about the welfare of their souls, and to point out to them more clearly the way of salvation"—that is, the shortest and quickest way to the river or pool. To take up the cross and follow Jesus down into the water is the cross in the estimation of most Baptists, and some say "the greatest cross." This was about the burden of those instructions. So it is reported to have been.

But no young Baptist preachers there! Was Mr. Hillman there every time to see there were none? Others say they were there. It was the subject of conversation in families in and around Clinton last August. Young ladies who were in the school say they did go there. It has been their habit or custom to visit there for years past, as well as during the last term. Thus, to number the informants: 1. Says they came to the institute during the meeting and "literally penned in the girls and talked to them about immersion, following Jesus down into the water, and joining the Baptist Church." 2. Another member of that family, I have heard, repeats this language. 3. Another pupil gives the names of several of those young preachers who came there and talked to the girls, and says they tried to get her to join the Baptist Church. Her family lives near Clinton. 4. Says they came to the institute, and that one or more tried to get her to quit the Methodist Sunday school and go to the Baptist Sunday school. 5. A gentleman who visited Clinton in 1869, and went to the institute with one of the professors or teachers of Mississippi College, while there saw young Baptist preachers come in and go to the school-room or some other room where the young ladies were. They seemed to come and go at will. 6. A gentleman who had a ward there says he saw them there on a visit he made to the institute, and when he called for his ward, after supper, expecting to walk with her to the chapel, he found she had gone with one of them. 7. A lady who attended school there since the war says Mr. Hillman is mistaken in his denials in this particular; that when she was there the young preachers were there every week one or more times; that they came sometimes under the pretense of singing, but it was only to see and talk with the girls. 8. The Rev. J. A. Hackett, in a letter to the Baptist, published November 2, 1872, speaks in the first part of Mississippi College, then says: "A word about Clinton Female Institute, located at Clinton, the seat of our college, and so nearly identified with it as almost to be a part of the same institution; and, besides, many of whose former pupils are now the worthy and honored wives of former students of the college." "So nearly identified as almost to be a part of the same!" The pupils of each are there often together. Alliances matrimonial grow out of them.

Mr. Hillman, in his letter to me, as well as in his article, says if I had asked of him or made inquiry I might have learned, etc.

Well, when I was in Clinton last August, and heard the things of which I have written, he was "gone to hum in the North," and I did not see him, and of course could not inquire of him.

Mr. Hillman is from the North, and I am informed that all his teachers in the institute last session were from the North. Hence prominent Baptists in central Mississippi refuse to patronize him. There is too much Yankee doodle in him and his teachers to suit some Southerners. Perhaps he was up there making investments of the money he had gulled the people of the South to pay him.

Mr. Hillman grows very gracious and catholic toward the close of his article and says: "Mr. Montgomery, as a minister of age and experience, could have enjoyed the same privilege of conversing with the young ladies of the institute on the subject of religion, had he sought it." Such privilege, he says, "has always been free to the ministers of other denominations." Well, venerable as I am, I do not visit the families of other denominations without a special invitation to do so. Then I do not try to proselyte them to the Methodist Church. I have such a contempt for one who will proselyte that I try to act so that no suspicion may attach to me on that subject.

Mr. Hillman has never invited me to visit his family or his school, nor to lecture the young ladies of his school, and I have too much self-respect to thrust myself and services upon either. I have been informed by the Rev. A. M. Campbell, who preached in Clinton in 1870, and is an old teacher, that Mr. Hillman did not invite him to visit or lecture to his school. The Rev J. J. Smylie, pastor there for 1872, and an old teacher, has not been spoken to by Mr. Hillman, and of course has not been invited to visit his school. So here is another of his soft "inflications" to be read—abroad—not practiced at home. He uses such things to decoy other denominations to patronize his school, that he may have spoil for the Baptist Church.

I would repeat the warning to every Methodist who has respect for his creed and church, his children and family—the peace and happiness of his family—to keep them away from Walter Hillman's school and influence. Undue influences will be brought to bear on them to get them into the Baptist Church. That will imply: 1. That they ignore their baptism and consecration to God, and charge you as acting outside of the Bible authority in having them baptized in infancy in the name of the Holy Trinity. 2. That they commit sacrilege by being immersed or rebaptized! One baptism is the Bible rule, but Baptists will have your children repeat it, and thereby commit sacrilege! Is it a light thing thus to trifle with sacred things? 3. Then they must consider you as unworthy to approach the Lord's table with them and their new allies, though your faith and piety may equal, if not surpass, those of any Baptist within a thousand miles of you! 4. Then they must submit to hear Baptist preachers say you are not in the church of Christ, because you have not been immersed by a Baptist preacher, and are unfit to fellowship or commune with them.

Will any true and thinking Methodist consider these things carefully and send his daughter to a school where she will be exposed to such assaults, and tempted to do such an act, which will have such consequences? Listen to the warning and do it not.

As Mr. Hillman was requested by his association to publish his denials and the correspondence between us, and had the money pledged for the expense, I hope he will publish the letters in whole, and this article also. His pamphlet will be incomplete and wanting in refreshing influences without this.

DR. SCUDDER'S new Central church, Brooklyn, is of corrugated iron, and cost $65,000; with lot and furnishing, $100,000. It will seat 2,500 people, and it is estimated that upward of 3,000 were present at the dedication. The auditorium is semi-circular in shape; the pulpit, with the organ in its rear, occupying the base.

Obituaries.

NOEMI HAMILTON, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, of Shreveport, Louisiana, died at home, November 1, 1872, aged eighteen years and thirty-four days.

She had been at school in Staunton, Virginia, for the last two years, and returned home a few weeks since in declining health. Her disease was rheumatism of the heart; she suffered almost continuously with this painful malady since April last; but she endured her confinement to the sick-room and her acute suffering with a patient sweetness of disposition remarkable in one so young and who had so much to make health and strength desirable. Under the training of a pious and faithful mother, seconded by the encouraging of an affectionate father, from very infancy she grew in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. She was always a regular attendant and diligent student of the Sabbath school, and eighteen months before her death, during a protracted meeting in Staunton, Virginia, she joined the Methodist Church. All through her brief life in this world her walk and conversation were in testimony that she remembered her Creator in the days of her youth. She had many lovely traits of character, which greatly endeared her not only to the loved ones at home, but to her teachers and companions; and she excelled in that "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which is, in the sight of God, of great price." In what sweet harmony with such a pure life, that at the last, with her dying accents, she should be talking about dreaming of the whiteness of the fleece of the Lamb of God! It was most affecting to see the fond father and the devoted mother kissing the pale lips of their dear first-born child for the last time on earth; it was touching—painfully so—to see the young man with whom the departed had plighted her first warm love, in response to the wishes of his own, and who, in his devotion, had followed her from Virginia, with her mother, anxiously watching and hoping for her recovery, now bending, with breaking heart, over the face of the dead, still lovely with the last sweet, smiling expression imparted thereon by her departed spirit; and yet there was a hallowing beauty in all. There was mourning, but it was not without hope. The natural eye saw only death and the grave, and wept; but the spiritual eye saw on beyond death and grave to the resurrection morning, and rejoiced in prospect of the blessed reunion by-and-by in the "building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Parent and lover and friend were sweetly comforted with the thought that she whom they mourned was not lost, but gone before. J. W.

IT IS MY PAINFUL DUTY to announce the death of JAMES ALBERT COX, son of Rev. C. M. Cox, presiding elder of the Demopolis district, Alabama Conference. Fatal sickness took place in Greensboro, on the morning of the fourth day of November, 1872. The deceased was nineteen years, nine months and seventeen days old. From childhood he had been good and dutiful to a remarkable degree. Few children were ever more obedient to parents than he. As he grew in years he gave evidence of a high order. GREENSBORO, ALA., Nov. 20, 1872.

AT A CALLED MEETING of the Hesperian Society of the Southern University, the following resolutions were adopted:

Inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom, to deprive us by death of the association and fellowship of our beloved brother, JAMES A. COX;

Resolved, That while we do not comprehend at the inscrutable dispensation of the All-Wise Ruler, we sincerely feel and lament the loss of our brother, not only as a student but as a gentleman, and as a bright and useful member of our brotherhood. He was a Christian; he was honest and upright, and he was a loyal supporter of our motto. Now he is gone; and though we may no more meet him here below, yet we will hold up his good name for imitation to all who shall come after us, and hope to meet him in that good land where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Resolved, That we truly and deeply sympathize with his friends and relations in their bereavement, and fully appreciate the extent of their loss.

Resolved, That we wear a badge of mourning in honor of our departed brother for thirty days.

THE project of an American church in Rome under the care of Presbyterians and Congregationalists is likely to be realized. A recent conference at the Tract House of several influential ministers and laymen of the two denominations resulted in the appointment of a committee consisting of Messrs. A. S. Barnes, R. P. Buck, A. S. Hatch, R. D. Benedict, W. A. Booth, W. E. Dodge, Rev. W. I. Budington, D. D., and Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., for the purpose of procuring funds and taking further measures toward the promotion of the enterprise.

WHOSOEVER WILL.

BY N. M. SOULE.

Our dear old grandpa is seventy;
Our Lulu is only seven;
But the hoary saint and the blooming child
Have treasures up in heaven.

Grandpapa's hand is brawny,
Lulu's dainty and small;
But the bountiful hands of seventy and seven
Reach freely forth to all.

Grandpapa nearcth the portal
Ending life's weary way;
But Lulu seeth the end afar—
A glimmer of golden day.

Grandpapa loveth the God-Man,
Claspeth ever his hand;
And Lulu loveth the Christ-Child,
The joy of her "Happy Land."

Together dear grandpa and Lulu—
White hair and golden head—
Have knelt at the holy altar to-day,
And taken the wine and bread.

And my soul breathes blessings on them—
Pure heart, or great or small,
To the heavenly fold of the young and old,
God guide and welcome all.

THE EXPLORATION OF PALESTINE

About thirty-five years ago our countryman, Dr. Edward Robinson, commenced the careful exploration of Palestine. He took with him as an associate Dr. Eli Smith, American missionary at Beirut, the most learned Arabic scholar then living. The results of their investigations were published simultaneously in English and German, and took a rank immediately, which can never be lost, as the leading authority in sacred geography. Succeeding investigators can fill up little gaps. They can, as Gannean has just done, discover where was the Stone of Bohan, or the Stone of Zoheleth, or other obscure and unimportant localities; but the great work of criticism and identification was then done by our countryman, Dr. Robinson.

Another of our countrymen, Lieutenant Lynch, an officer of the navy, some years later, by the permission of the American government, made a careful examination of the Dead sea, determining its depression, sounding its depth and mapping its contour. This was the first topographical survey ever made with scientific instruments in Palestine. Every subsequent investigation of that strange valley of the Ghor must take an American's work the basis of its labors.

The religion of the civilized world, whether Christian or Jewish, or Mohammedan even, is first Palestinian. Palestine is its holy land. The geography and antiquities of the Old or the New Testament must be explained by careful study of the very region where Abraham and David and Jesus wandered or fought or taught. We are not surprised, therefore, that the English have devised the plan of an elaborate and complete survey of Palestine. They have been for several years engaged upon it. They have an officer of the British army detailed for the survey, and their plan is to indicate on their map every hill, valley, stream and river, giving to each its exact place and its Arabic name, thus identifying many sites as yet unknown, and giving to scholars at home all the means of further investigation which they could have if on the ground. Only when this work is finished will those who venerate the founders of their faith have done their duty to their memory.

It was only proper that Americans should take their part in completing what they had begun. It was arranged two years ago that the English should confine themselves to the regions west of the Jordan. This includes the old cities of Hebron, Jernsalem, Bethlehem and Nazaroth, intrinsically most interesting of all; but it is a region over which every traveler has passed and of which a hundred have written. But little of novel interest could be expected from another survey of these familiar localities. But the region "beyond Jordan" is almost a virgin country. Its ruins remain unvisited. Its giant cities are still a mystery. It includes the old land of Moab, whence has been snatched that strange relic which has just told us of the victories of the Moabite King Mesha, whose sacrifice of his son is recorded in the third chapter of Second Kings, and which gives us the most ancient specimen yet discovered of our alphabetical writing. It includes the country of Sihon, King of the Amorites, and that of Og, King of Bashan, who was himself one of the giants. Here was the home of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh. There is that Mizpeh of the Land of Gilead, out of which went Jephthah to fight against the Ammonites, and to which he returned to fulfill the vow which made him a childless man. There is Jabesh Gilead, whose men of valor broke through the lines of the Philistines, and snatched for honorable cremation the bodies of Saul and his sons from the walls of Bethshan. There lived the Gergesenes, in whose territory the devils entered into the swine. There was Bashan, whose ruined cities, with mighty doors of solid stone seem the home of giants. There are the Roman cities of Decapolis, and there Philip and Lysanias were tetrarchs. There are the famous ruins of Palmyra and Baalbek. The country is fresh with interest, and cannot but attract to it the enterprise of Americans.

The American Palestine Exploration Society, under the presidency of Prof. R. D. Hitchcock, D. D., of New York, sends out its first expedition within a week. It will be under the charge of Lieutenant E. Z. Steever, of the United States army, a gentleman who enters with great zeal into the work, and who, by his high scholarship and his remarkable vigor, is exceedingly well fitted for the work. Under his charge will be the conduct of a careful topographical survey and the preparation of a trustworthy map. He will be accompanied by Prof. John A. Paine, lately of Robert College, Constantinople, and who was afterward invited to a professorship in the Syrian Protestant College in Beirut. Mr. Paine, who is no novice in Palestinian exploration, will have charge of the archæological department, and give what attention he can to the collection of specimens to illustrate the botany, zoology and geology of the region. As he is one of the best botanists in the country, he will not be likely to neglect this part of his duties. Mr. Van Dyck, our vice consul at Beirut, will add to other duties that of linguist. He is a son of Dr. Van Dyck, of our Syrian mission, and Arabic is to him a vernacular language. Other gentlemen will accompany the party, which will be well-equipped for its work—one of them, probably, an artist of reputation from this city.

The work cannot be done in one year. The survey ought to be continued for as much as six years; and if, when this region has been thoroughly mapped, a similar work could be done for the region of Babylon, where extremely valuable historical inscriptions are sure to be found, we should rejoice. But that is not yet in contemplation. We bespeak for this effort the hearty support and sympathy of the American public. It is under the charge of some of our most public-spirited Christian and Hebrew gentlemen, and under their patronage we hope that this region, entirely intrusted to American enterprise, to be first opened by us, as was the west of the Jordan valley by Dr. Robinson, will also be carefully explored and all its treasures discovered, that we may have no cause to be ashamed of our part in the great task of collating the Land and the Book.—Independent.

FAULTS OF CULTURE.

Is it heresy to say that no pursuit can be more selfish than that of culture for its own sake? If there is forgiveness for such a sin, either in this world or the world to come, let us commit it, and so have the pleasure of uttering a very earnest conviction. Any competent observer cannot fail to have noticed that the seeking of that which is most admirable in intellectual finish and furniture, simply for the sake of holding it in possession, has the same degrading effect upon the soul that comes to the miser from hoarding his gold. So it often happens that as men grow more learned by study, and more skilled in intellectual practice, and more nicely adjusted and finished in their power, and more delicate and exact in their tastes, do they lose their sympathy with the world of common life, and become fastidious, and disdainful and cold.

It is often noticed, with surprise and regret, that as culture comes in faith goes out. The fact seems strange to those who think that faith, if it is a rational thing in itself, should grow vigorous and far-reaching with the rising power and deepening delicacy of the mind. "Is it only the ignorant who have faith?" they ask; "and must man surrender this divinest of all possessions when culture enters?" Ay, he must, if culture is pursued as an end in itself. Culture, thoroughly Christianized—culture, pursued for ends of benevolence—strengthens faith; but culture that ends in itself and its possessor is infidel in every tendency. The culture which is pursued for its own sake makes a god of self, and so turns away the soul from its relations—earthly and heavenly—that self becomes the one great fact of the universe. A culture which does not serve God by direct purpose, and with loving and reverent devotion, is the purest type of practical infidelity; and there are notable individual instances, even in so young a civilization as ours, in which constantly ripening culture has been a constantly descending path into paganism. We fear that any thoughtful American, undertaking to name those in his own country who have carried intellectual culture to the highest point, would be obliged to indicate men and women to whom Christianity has no high meaning, and by whom it wins no victories.

When culture is selfish all its sympathies are clannish. There is nothing outside of its circle to be either admired or tolerated. Such culture can have no broad aims, except the selfish aim to be broadly recognized. Whatever work it does is done for the few. It is too proud to be useful. It works away at its own refinement and aggrandizement, but refuses to come down into the dusty ways of life, to point men upward and to help them bear their burdens. The world all might go to the dogs or the devil for anything that selfish culture would do to prevent it. That work is done, and must always be done, by those who have faith—by the humble who have something better than culture, or the high who have placed their culture under the control of that law of love whose feet stand upon the earth, and whose hands grasp the throne.

The farmer, in recommending an animal to a purchaser, talks of flesh that is "worked on," in contradistinction to that which is acquired while standing still and feeding. The one acquisition is recognized as possessing qualities of power and endurance which the other does not. It is precisely so with culture. That which is "worked on"—that which comes while its possessor is busy in ministry—is as beautiful as it is valuable. This, indeed, is the only culture that comes to a man as a legitimate, healthful and valuable possession. The florist can show us flowers whose beauty has been won by culture, but it has been won at the fatal cost of their fragrance. There may be much in even a selfish culture to admire, but if there is nothing to inhale, our hearts are still hungry.

There is a sort of blind worship of culture among the people, which would not be worship were it not blind. If they could comprehend its narrowness of sympathy and its selfishness of purpose; if they could see and measure its greed for praise and its contempt for them and their acquisitions and pursuits; if they could feel its arrogance and pride, its charms would all disappear. If they could see how, in their earnest coveting of the best gifts, those who possess them had utterly forgotten the "more excellent way," they would shrink from them in terror or in pity. It is sad to think that from the most notable school of personal culture in the country, faith long since departed, with limping wings, while devotion to the work of making the world better went out with faith. God save us all from the influence of such a culture as this, and help us to be grateful that it has seen its best or its worst days, and is dying at its root! Christianity must kill it or Christianity must die. It must kill Christianity or it must die. The event is not doubtful.—Scribner's Monthly.

CELIBACY OF MINISTERS.

The apostles evidently intended the ministers of the churches which they formed, to be of and with their people—to be united with them in all their social ties, the relationships and sympathies, of common life. And accordingly among the very first of the directions given by St. Paul, in his Pastoral Epistles, for their ordination, appears the injunction that a presbyter and deacon should each be "the husband of one wife." Whatever points of dispute may be raised upon these words, it is clear that a Christian minister was expected to be a married man. The honor given by the apostolic religion to married and domestic life, and the responsibility assigned to the Christian family, as the wholesome fountain from whence sound piety and moral purity were to flow forth into the whole church were to be especially exemplified in the office-bearers of the community. The contrary rule of a later age took its origin from the perverse, one-sided asceticism which the wide diffusion of Gnostic principles had introduced. The Gnostic doctrines respecting the material world and animal life began very early to infect the church, and produce a general sentiment that celibacy was a much higher and holier state than married life—that it brought men nearer to God, and fitted them for receiving and imparting the Holy Spirit. Such false sentiments, encouraged and strengthened by the extravagant manner in which church authorities extolled the celestial virtues of a single life, very naturally attached themselves to the prevalent idea of a priestly estate, pre-eminently consecrated to God. The state which was the holiest upon earth ought surely to belong to those who ministered in the holiest mysteries. And by the end of the third century a notion [illegible] grown up in the church that its ministers ought to be unmarried men. This unscriptural opinion, as is often the case with religious errors, originated with the general body of the people, who, however, only carried out to its legitimate effects the teaching which they had received. Married priests began to be looked upon, in the popular estimation, as degraded. Some persons refused to accept their ministrations; and although synodal decrees at first reproved this objection, the popular prejudice prevailed, and by the end of the fourth century the celibacy of the clergy was enforced; and a married presbyter became a criminal. So directly was the apostolic rule contradicted, and that brand of the predicted apostasy, "forbidding to marry," was stamped upon the church, to its lasting injury.—Ecclesiastical Polity of the New Testament, by Rev. Dr. Jacob.

HEAVEN.

Many curious speculations have been indulged regarding the exit of the soul of a righteous man—how it passes through the air and ethereal regions; and how, leaving stars and systems behind, it soars with strong, swift pinion into the august presence of Deity. Such speculations are far more inquisitive than important. The fact that the holy soul is immediately transferred to the highest heavens is infinitely more interesting and consolatory than the method of its transmission. It has no "successive ascensions," ever changing its home, and therefore never at home; rising from one height of glory and blessedness to another still higher, only that each height may be gained and left behind. Scarcely has death broken down "the middle wall of partition," scarcely has he lifted the veil, when a boundless territory of brightness and joy stretches out before the naked spirit. Not a sand has time to fall. One step, and the soul is in glory. The flight through the immensity is made "in the twinkling of an eye;" the pilgrimage to the spheres occupies but a moment. There is no waiting for a celestial convoy. A troop of angelic beings, unseen, crowd the chamber of death, and are ready with outstretched wing to bear the spirit home to God; the last quiver gasped from the bloodless lip, the last sigh breathed out, and, swifter than the beams of the morning, or the flash of lightning, they tower with it to glory. The beggar was borne to Abraham's bosom by swift-winged angels. The dying felon had scarcely groaned his last on Calvary when he opened his eyes in Paradise. He passed direct from a cross to a throne—from consummate ignominy to celestial honor. Ere his dying wail had spent itself he had begun the song of immortality; ere his mangled frame was cold and stiff in death, his feet had trod the crystal pavement of "the holy city," and his fingers had struck celestial notes from a golden lyre.

"Oh, change! Oh, wondrous change!
Burst are the prison bars;
This moment there—so low,
So agonized—and now
Beyond the stars!
Oh, change! stupendous change!
There lies the soulless cloud:
The sun eternal breaks;
The new immortal wakes—
Wakes with his God!"

One would imagine that on being so suddenly ushered into the infinite sublimities of a new and glorious world the soul would be overwhelmed, nay, annihilated. Great excitement has sometimes driven reason from her throne, and burst the rejoicing heart; and verily the joy and splendor of that moment is more than enough to confound the bravest and holiest spirit. But no: He who has protected it from all evil, also shields when embodied amid that opulence of celestial glory, so that it feels serenely calm and perfectly at ease the moment it crosses the threshold of its heavenly home, and is encompassed by the stupendous realities of an eternal condition.—Edwin Davies.

The corner-stone of the new building for the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, was laid on the thirtieth of October, with appropriate ceremonies. A meeting was held on the grounds; the weather was fine and the attendance large. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Beadle, Prof. Meigs and Prof. Wood, after which the corner-stone was laid by Mr. Ruschenberger "in the name of Science and of Improvement in Knowledge." The exercises were concluded by a prayer for divine blessing on the undertaking, offered by the Rev. G. D. Boardman, D. D. The academy now possesses more than 6,000 minerals, 700 rocks, 65,000 fossils, 70,000 species of plants, 1,000 species of zoophytes, 2,000 species of crustaceans, 500 species of myriapods and arachnidans, 25,000 species of insects, 20,000 species of shell-bearing mollusks, 2,000 species of fishes, 800 species of reptiles, 21,000 birds, with the nests of 200 and the eggs of 1,500 species, 1,000 mammals, and nearly 900 skeletons and pieces of osteology. Most of the species are represented by four [illegible] positions, so that, including the archæological and ethnological cabinets, space is required now for the arrangement of not less than 400,000 objects, besides the library of more than 22,500 volumes.

"My Dear Polly, I am surprised at your taste in wearing another woman's hair on your head," said Mr. Smith to his wife. "My dearest Joe, I am equally astonished that you persist in wearing another sheep's wool on your back."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The new Bible House at Constantinople cost $65,000, and is four stories high.

A great revival is in progress in Fisherville, Maine. Over two hundred have professed conversion.

The Karen College in Rangoon, in connection with the Baptist mission, was opened May 28, 1872, with seventeen promising young men.

The endowment of old John Street church, New York, has reached $20,000 nearly. The building and society are historical and should be preserved.

Recreants.—The London Christian World says that the "Christian marriage bill" has been prepared to prevent Europeans in India from changing their faith for the purpose of polygamy.

The Norwegian church in Chicago, so many years a mission church, has not only become self-supporting, but has this year reported an offering of $300.64 to the missionary treasury.

A missionary in China states that if the present ratio of conversions goes on as it has been going on for some years back, "by the year 1900 the native Christians in China will number over two millions."

The Rev. John T. Jones, a frugal and industrious Ottawa Indian, recently died, leaving his entire property, worth about $60,000, to the cause of the Baptist Ministerial Educational Society in the State of Kentucky.

The Jews of New York city are said to be seriously considering the expediency of transferring their weekly religious services from Saturday to Sunday. Several of their synagogues throughout the country are now open on both days.

The Wesleyan Methodist Trust Assurance Company, indorsed by the Conference recently held in London, for the insurance of connectional property only, is so popular that its stock of £25,000, in £10 shares, is nearly all subscribed.

An Annual Conference of British Mormons has just been held at Glasgow, reporting 767 members. Of these 79 are elders, 27 are priests, 43 teachers and 13 deacons. The number is smaller than last year, as 200 have emigrated to Salt Lake.

The Irish Christian missions among the Roman Catholics in Ireland have been eminently successful. Three thousand children attend their schools, while many clergymen, teachers and missionaries are from among the converts from Romanism.

There are fourteen foreign missions in charge of the American Baptist Union, having in all about twenty-four thousand communicants. In addition to the hundred American laborers in these missions, there are five hundred native helpers, of whom about eighty are ordained ministers.

The late Bishop Eastburn, of Massachusetts, gave of his income during ten years more than $20,000 in aid of religious objects within his diocese, and bequeathed his whole property, on the expiration of a trust in favor of his widow, to charities and organizations which in life he loved and fostered.

In the Island of Ceylon the Wesleyans have thirty-eight missionaries, of whom only eight are Europeans. The number of members is 2,787, and of children in the schools 6,100. Self-supporting churches (native) are growing up, and the educational institutions of both the stations—Jaffna and Singhalese—are efficient and successful.

The annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions took place in New Haven, Connecticut, on Tuesday, October 8, with a very large attendance. The treasurer's report shows expenditures of $381,364 as the cost of missions, and total expenditure of $428,693. There were $2[illegible]207 received as [illegible] and $125,[illegible] legacies.

Iron Church for South America. The last novelty in the church-building line was the shipping of a large Gothic iron church for Lima, Peru, in a ship chartered for the purpose. Its cost, including the accompanying organ, was over $100,000. The church was first entirely finished and set up in New York, and then taken down and packed for shipment.

On the sixth ultimo five of the Chinamen who have been on probation for the last six months were received into the Third Congregational church of San Francisco. The vote on their reception was unanimous, and Rev. Mr. [illegible] the late pastor, officiated on the occasion, as was fitting. Of the eight who originally applied, one has died and two have returned to China.

Father Hyacinthe has been buried alive. In consequence of his marriage the Dominicans of the convent to which he belonged held a hypothecal funeral over an empty coffin, which was placed in the middle of the chapel, and chanted the burial service. The account does not state whether they sprinkled holy water over his shadow, but it is stated that "the scene was most imposing." On whom does it impose?

It appears, from statistics recently gathered, that the number of native Christian communicants in North India has more than doubled since 1860. The total number of communicants reported is 13,980, with a Christian community of no less than 48,591 souls. The number of Protestant native Christians in India, Burmah and Ceylon is estimated at 300,000. But still, what are these among so many? we might ask, while we would not despise the day of small things.

The Rev. C. D. Bradlee, Unitarian, having been invited to assume the pastorate of the Christian Unity Society, Boston, entered on his ministrations a few weeks since. In the course of his introductory sermon he said: "I frankly, therefore, confess to you that I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe also that those who look upon him as a mere man, or as one having faults, should at once renounce their name, taking a title more justly expressive of their faith."

The fifteenth anniversary of the Fulton street prayer meeting was held September 23. It was a beautiful day, and long before the hour of service the church was overflowing with a deeply interested audience. Dr. Cuyler presided. Eight speakers had been selected, representing six denominations, Rev. William H. Boole representing the Methodist. It closed by Dr. Tyng offering the Lord's Prayer, in which all joined, and the pronouncing of the benediction. No previous anniversary has been more interesting.

The Nashville (Tennessee) Banner of September 15 says: Last Sunday Rev. Mr. Landrum, a Baptist minister, in his usual health, dropped dead in the pulpit in the church at Rover, Bedford county. He had sung and prayed, read his text, and was proceeding with his sermon, when he remarked that he felt sick, took a drink of water, wet his forehead, fell back in the pulpit, and expired immediately. He is the second one, we are informed, who has died suddenly in that pulpit within the past two years.

The Texas Baptist General Association, at its recent session, came to the point on the total abstinence question in the following manner:

Resolved, That we consider the taking of one dram, simply for the gratification of the appetite, positively sinful, and we do earnestly entreat our brethren everywhere to abstain from the use of everything that will intoxicate.

Resolved, That while we deprecate dram-drinking, we consider the manufacture or sale of intoxicating drinks, either by wholesale or retail, much more sinful.

All the missionaries in Mexico of the American and Foreign Christian Union are reported by the Christian World as having been safely preserved during the revolution which has just ended, and especially those who have resided in and around Monterey, the chief seat of the rebellion, who were exposed to peculiar dangers. The native colporteurs and evangelists also, together with the members of their churches, though dispersed for a time, are all safe. None of the churches have been destroyed. On the contrary, a new one has been organized recently in the vicinity of Cadereita, with twelve members.

The priests in the eastern part of France are on a strike, having raised the price of masses to be said for the repose of souls. According to the Patrie of Geneva, Madam F——, a lady of Bourg (Ain,) lately bequeathed to the parish church a sum of three thousand francs, on condition that forty masses should be said every year, twenty for the repose of her own soul, and twenty for that of [illegible]'s. The ecclesiastics, considering [illegible] the price of masses has risen, [illegible] other commodities, that it will still [illegible], and that consequently the [illegible] imposed by the legacy will one day be greater than the advantages derived from it, have refused to accept the money.

Agent of Conviction of Sin.—No human teacher can do it. Conscience cannot do it. Law in none of its forms, human or divine, can do it. Although the word of God is the sword of the Spirit, yet, unless the Spirit of God draws forth that sword, it lies powerless in its sheath. Only when the Spirit of God wields it is it quick and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, a discerner of the thoughts and purposes of the heart. Therefore, as the work of convincing the world of sin is one which nothing less than the Spirit of God can effect—and which yet must be effected thoroughly, if sin is to be driven out from the world—our Savior was mercifully pleased to send the Comforter to produce this conviction in mankind.—Archdeacon Hare.

GIVING TO THE POOR.

It would not be an unprofitable exercise for our readers to search out the Scriptures which enjoin the duty of care for the poor. Altogether the passages would fill a column or more. The care for the poor exhibited in the Bible is no mean proof of its divine original. The tenderness and pity of the infinite Father finds expression on almost every page. Special provisions were made in the law of Moses for the relief and protection of the unfortunate. The fruits of the seventh year were left to them. The harvest field was not to be gleaned, and the corners were not to be wholly reaped. The vineyard was not to be gleaned, nor was every grape to be gathered. "Thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger." The command was clear and comprehensive. "For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor and to thy needy in the land." Job protests that he had not eaten his morsel himself alone, "and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof," and that he had not "seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering." Evidently this regard for the poor held a high place in the patriarchal religion. Many are the promises connected with giving to the needy. "Blessed is he that consideroth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

No sin is more severely denounced than that of wronging and oppressing the poor. There is no darker manifestation of human wickedness than this—"because he hath oppressed and hath forgotten the poor." It is a high crime against God himself, for "he that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker." God is the special friend, advocate and avenger of the poor. "He shall stand at the right hand of the poor." David says: "I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor." God has said: "For the oppression of the poor I will arise." He stands for their defense, and watches for them with a jealous vigilance. Their cries reach his ears, whatever may become of prayers which go up from well-fed worshipers, who kneel on velvet stools, and forget that hundreds are starving within the sound of the organ which peals with their praise. Read "the Sermon on the Mount," and mark the prominence which the subject has there. We are to give alms of such things as we possess. The golden rule, the royal law of liberty, is love, and the essence of love is giving. There is in the Savior's teaching a recklessabandon, an overflowing munificence. "Give to every man that asketh of thee." "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." The young man who came to Jesus with the question, "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" was directed to sell all and give to the poor. Zacheus showed the sincerity of his repentance by giving the half of his goods to the poor at once. There were large arrearages to be brought up in his case, and the same is true of all who have neglected to discharge this obligation. "The bag" which Judas so grievously perverted was doubtless drawn upon often to relieve the destitute, and Christ's life and ministry illustrated the duty which he has so pointedly enjoined upon his disciples.

Poor himself for our sakes, his preaching and benevolent ministrations were chiefly to the poor. As the Advocate and Friend of the destitute and afflicted he says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Christ's suffering representatives are in every community—the sick, the imprisoned, the naked and the hungry. What a sham is our profession of love to him when these are neglected! It is against this dead faith that both James and John inveigh. It is against the charity of words, this shameful inconsistency, that they protest. "Depart in peace; be ye warmed and filled." "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Among the few things laid upon the Gentiles by the decree of the council at Jerusalem was this: "That they should remember the poor." The gospel, delivered from the ceremonial law, and the oppressive ritualistic yoke, was to go out to the world with this distinctive message of mercy in its farthest and latest utterance. Remember the poor! Repent, believe, be holy, send the glad tidings to the isles that are waiting for Messiah's law; but in all and with all, remember the poor! Paul's life-long devotion to the relief of the poor saints is a lesson to us. He did remember, and he put it into his preaching and itinerating everywhere, this care for the afflicted and the impoverished.

We fear that this subject has not always due prominence in the Christian conscience. We can hardly suppose that any professed followers of Jesus, at least any that read these lines, are guilty of grinding the faces of the poor, or of keeping back from them that which is their just due in the business engagements of life. Hard landlords and over-exacting creditors we may not be. Then, again, our giving may approach the measure of duty in other directions; but how about remembering the poor, ministering directly and personally to their wants, and sharing with them such of this world's good as we have? Instead of waiting for the poor to seek us, we should seek them—"visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction," and hunt up and relieve those who may shrink from revealing their wants to the world. The giving of many is like that of throwing a bone to a dog, or it is elicited by the most persistent application. We have personal knowledge of many cases of extreme destitution, dependent women and children, and the sick wanting the barest necessaries of life. Large cities present more cases of charity, but every community has some. Men and women professing godliness are enjoying every comfort and luxury, wearing silks and jewelry, and sitting by their warm firesides, while many of their fellow-beings, within easy reach of them, are suffering from cold and hunger.

With many it is a sin of inadvertence. They are not in the habit of "considering," of "remembering" the poor. It has not entered as it should into their daily religious life as a prominent grace, and they have not thought of their piety as James thought of it when he exclaims: "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" With others the lack of giving is more the result of extravagance. In keeping up with the times and the prevailing style of living there is nothing left for the poor. The cost of a single dinner or the price of a bonnet is more than is given to the famishing in a year. The business of Christ's disciples is not to keep up style, nor to follow the fashions, but by frugality and economy to save that they may give. Mr. Wesley, in rendering an account of his plate to the Commissioners of Excise, replied that he had but two silver teaspoons at London and two at Bristol, and was determined never to have more, while so many around him wanted bread. His example has a wide application, and points to an amount of guilt among Christian people that is absolutely startling. The lust of the eye, the lusts of the flesh and the pride of life exhaust the resources of those whose substance should be given to honor God, and to relieve the Lord's poor.

PLAIN TALKING.

The New York Methodist, noticing an article in the Southern Christian Advocate, says:

This writer concludes, therefore, that the "Plan of Separation" is practically null and void. Of course it is. The hope of reviving it is the merest infatuation. We don't intend to let the South live wholly to itself and by itself. We fought to make it ours as well as theirs, who dwell within it—a land to which we can go at pleasure, and in which we can trade and settle as we list, carrying our opinions, institutions and social habits with us. The demand for reinforcement of the "Plan of Separation" is apparently a part of a policy that would isolate the South from the North in every particular. What hopes are wrapped up in this policy we know not, but if among them is that which looks to isolation, with the purpose of accomplishing an ultimate revenge, we beg them not to suffer themselves to be deluded. The recent Presidential election is proof that the nation never intends to surrender the practical results of the war. The South must accept them as irreversible. The old state of society can never be restored. Southern Methodism, so long as it insists upon isolation, subjects itself to the suspicion of waiting and wishing for some convulsion which shall carry us back to 1860, to the subjection of the colored race, and to the loud assertion of State rights. Such a suspicion may do great injustice to Southern Methodists, but so long as their present temper continues (unless their press misrepresents them) it will exist.

One reason why we deem it important for Northern churches to go southward is that it may be possible for Northern men to settle in the late slave States without any abridgment of their liberty of opinion or speech or conduct, as secured by national law. If for being what they are, they are to be socially ostracised, then we wish them to be able to take society with them for their social protection. And for its members the Christian church is society. This is plain talking, but the case demands the utmost plainness.

We quote the paragraph simply as exhibiting the tone and temper of our beloved brethren North, and their ideas and purposes respecting the South. The Methodist speaks in a very oracular and ex-cathedra way, and we poor subjugated dependents now know how our masters are to treat us. Of course we needed a plain talking to, and here we have it. "We fought to make it ours as well as theirs, who dwell within it." This is true, except the last clause—"as well as theirs." It was a war of conquest and plunder, without regard to the rights and liberties of the Southern people. Our Northern brothers wanted the country for themselves, and Ahab must have Naboth's vineyard without regard to States rights or any other rights.

As for the "Plan of Separation," nobody expects them to observe it, or any other compact. Neither are they likely to come to any just settlement in regard to the property question; but we can better afford to lose than they can to keep the properties in dispute. They fought to possess the country—the land, churches and government—and they are not to stickle about civil or religious obligations. Isolation, in the sense of excluding the Northern Church from the Southern States, is what few Southern Methodists dream of. We may not fraternize with them, we may have our own views of the animus of their missionary movements in our midst, we may have for them no other love than such as we are commanded to exercise toward those who have shown themselves to be our enemies; but this matter of isolation is purely a question of principle and policy with themselves. The Methodist knows very well that there is no let or hinderance to Northern preaching, or to the building of Northern churches in our midst, so long as the missionary appropriations are put at a liberal figure. The fact that they are holding and using our churches, with no other right or title than a military order, is proof enough that the field is open. It is true that our white people, and, in many cases, the better sort of people from the North, give them a wide berth, and prefer the Southern Church; but this is a matter of taste, and no ground of censure.

That "one reason why we deem it important for Northern churches to go southward" is well enough. If they bring their congregations with them, and worship in churches which they come honestly by, there will be less suspicion of a proselyting and disintegrating purpose. They have taken churches belonging to others, and colored societies ready to their hand, and their preachers are supported by missionary money where nobody wants them; but we know of no instance where their ministry has come simply to supply the spiritual needs of a body of immigrants from the North. The recent appropriation of over $100,000 to the Southern work shows how many Northern men there are in the South who want their preachers. This social ostracism, if it exists, must be on other than sectional grounds. We are glad to know a good many Northern people, some of whom have joined the Southern Church since the war, and they are highly esteemed, and received as brethren and fellow-citizens. People may make themselves offensive, and forfeit all claims to respect, simply because they are ill-mannered, and destitute of refinement and without integrity.

The Southern Church is not deluded. We know what the recent Presidential election means, we know what "the practical results of the war" mean, and also what the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South, with its backing of $100,000 a year means. The crime of crimes against us is that we have no love of complacency and admiration for the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that we believe she has grown no better, but rather worse, during the last quarter of a century. It is the "isolation" of pursuing our own work, and of having nothing to do with her, that stirs up the bile, and leads to the exhibition of such a temper as the Methodist displays. There is no feeling of revenge on our part, no ill-will, no looking for the restoration of things as they were. If we do not choose "to shake hands across the bloody chasm," it is because the chasm was made by themselves before there was blood, and because, apart from the war and its "practical results," the elements of repulsion are more than those of attraction. The arrogant and bullying tone of the Methodist and its persistent misrepresentations are a luminous comment upon the fraternal professions of the Northern Church.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

Mr. Editor: Accompanying please find minutes of the East Texas Conference, which adjourned at this place last night. The session was a pleasant and, as I believe, a profitable one. The territory of this Conference is being constantly depleted by removals to the black prairie soil of western Texas. For my own part, I prefer the sight of woods; as one remarked: "A tree is a sublime object in nature." It is indeed, and has many most excellent uses hid away in its body and limbs. Lumber and firewood rarely go amiss; and on my way to this point I met many large ox wagons, loaded with boards, steadily pressing their freight to the wide open country of Dallas and Kauffman. However, the plowshare runs much more glibly in that rootless region; so that nature has fairly arranged her gifts, and each section has some just compensation for its comparative defects. Still the mass of emigrants pass over east Texas, and weary their teams in searching for some better country. This furnishes an explanation for the fact that the membership of this Conference has not increased during the year, but about holds at the same figure as at the last report—nine thousand, one hundred and thirty members.

Our missionary anniversary yielded only some $450—less than it should have done in view of the thrift and life that meets one everywhere in Tyler. It was all in cash—no "futures." Some apology is to be found in the very recent growth of our church here. Methodism has not heretofore been in the advance, but now promises much. So, too, the finances of the Conference, excepting in the item of widows' and orphans' collection, were meager enough. The absence of parsonages may account for this by a very short method of reasoning: the absence of a parsonage forces the preacher to buy his own home. This in turn causes the circuit to abate its contributions, for "the brother has a home;" and this again superinduces general indifference to the support of the gospel. Transfers are welcomed here, and good men and true of South Carolina would do well to make their way to the East Texas Conference. Lands are reasonable and but few of the counties have burdened themselves with railroad subsidies. Tyler is the most inviting town in appearance we have as yet seen in Texas, and many sightly, comfortable houses are going up in different directions, and dotting the very eligible sites which its undulating ground affords. At present the place is suffocated with United States Court trials, and machinery of witnesses, juries and parties indicted under the Kuklux laws of Congress, charges being generally for "conspiracy." The Conference was very hospitably entertained. Benjamin A. Thompson, James R. Wages, James M. Bond, James N. Bridges and Ramsay C. Armstrong were received on trial. Several transfers from other Conferences were heartily welcomed and generously treated. Wiley H. Ardis and John W. Broxson were readmitted.

I had the pleasure of meeting here with quite a number of old friends whom I last saw around the camp fires of 1864. I was glad to see them, none the worse for wear, pursuing the even tenor of their way to the better land.

A. R. Craven, J. M. Ellisor, J. R. Wages, J. M. Boad, T. J. J. Howard, W. Vines, E. T. Brasher and J. O. Clifton were ordained local deacons, and also Woodson Pipkin, a colored man. Elijah F. Boone was ordained elder from among the traveling preachers, and E. B. Zacry and B. W. Brown local.

Tyler, November 26, 1872.

BISHOP PIERCE IN THE WEST.

Bishop Pierce, writing to the Southern Christian Advocate, November 20, gives the following account of the Western Conferences:

It was my purpose to visit Colorado, but I was called home by domestic affliction. Thus I did not go beyond Nebraska. The soil of Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska is generally and wonderfully rich. The corn crop this year is a feast to the eye. To a man who is accustomed to small fields, with seven-feet rows and three or four in the drill, and twenty bushels to the acre—a crop to brag on—an area that the eye cannot compass waving in the wind like a canebrake, and bearing an hundred bushels on every acre, is a sight that cheers. No wonder that the contrast stirs the spirit of emigration. And yet very few improve their condition by moving from the Atlantic States to these fertile regions. There is an unsolved problem in this—that on the poor lands of Georgia the people are doing as well financially as those who till the rich lands of the great West. As to climate, productions, comforts, commercial relations the year round, the advantage is with the East. I travel and see and wonder and admire, but always return well satisfied that he who fixes the bounds of our habitation gave me a home in middle Georgia.

I am glad to say to the church that the Western Conference is full of promise. It is made up largely of young, vigorous men, who have gone out to work for and grow up with the country. A few more are needed right now. Prompt occupancy of every point is very important. To be on hand, organized, at work among the settlers, ready to serve newcomers, is the pledge of success. People are pouring in, new towns are springing up, cities grow as by storm, railroads are stretching in every direction. "Westward the star of empire wends its way." If as a church we lag anew, we forestall ourselves in the future. To our people I would say, "Stay where you are;" but to the young preachers I say: "Go West as long as there is a vacant place." The interests of religion cannot wait the development of the church on the ground—the older Conferences must furnish the pioneers. Let them go, and go at once.

The Missouri Conference has a fine territory and a strong corps of preachers. There are no blazing comets, but a fair show of steady planets among them—sensible, earnest, consecrated workers. These are the men who build the church. And the church is rising, expanding, waxing stronger under the ministration of these men. Mere churches and better, parsonages, better support, increase of numbers, are among the signs of progress and promise. To be a member of the Missouri Conference is an honor now; before long the prestige of the association will help a man along anywhere.

Next comes the West St. Louis Conference. This name is inappropriate to the region embraced in the boundaries of the Conference. It does not suggest location or relation. It has no connection with St. Louis, except that once it was a part of the St. Louis Conference. Some prominent thing or place within the territory—a city, river or mountain—should furnish the name. Such a name would locate and identify the Conference. Separated by the Missouri river from the Missouri Conference, the West St. Louis juts up against Kansas and the Indian Territory on the west, joins Arkansas on the south, and then by a line I need not describe cuts off southeastern Missouri for the St. Louis Conference. The territory within these lines is more diversified than on the other side of the river. There are mountains, prairies, forests, rich land and poor land. But it furnishes a fine field for labor and usefulness. The preachers are hardy and heroic, working on small pay, but full of heart and hope—confident of a grand future. They have talent and enterprise among them, and do not intend to be a whit behind their brethren elsewhere. The Lord give them a prosperous year.

The St. Louis Conference was the last I attended. This is the smallest in area and in the number of preachers; but, with St. Louis as the nucleus, contains within it the elements and resources for progress and power. St. Louis is the city of the West, and will be in the life of a man the city of the continent. Such a location, such a country around it, such a railroad center, such a population and such progress already—who can calculate its future?

The Conference met at Arcadia—a little town embosomed in the mountains and prominent among us as the seat of one of our church schools. The session was brief and pleasant. The surrounding country is interesting in every aspect of it. The scenery combines the beautiful and the grand. The hills are full of ore, the mountains are almost solid iron, the valleys are productive, and there are quarries of the finest granite I ever saw. The grain is fine, the colors variegated and the polish equal to marble. The cars carry every day eighteen hundred tons of iron ore to the furnaces at St. Louis. Iron is king here. Here is Iron mountain, Irondale, Ironton—iron ore, iron furnaces. Iron is capital and labor. It is the wealth of the rich and the employment of the poor. Down here you need not talk about gold and silver. There is nothing like iron.

My duties did not allow me the privilege of visiting the points of interest round about. Some of the brethren did go, and came back all aglow with enthusiasm. Pilot Knob was the chief attraction, and a view from its summit was regarded a rich compensation for the toil of the ascent. Bishop Marvin was present at the Conference, and went with the brethren to see this natural wonder. Like the rest, he was deeply impressed, and in a sermon at night turned what he saw, thought and felt to good account, by way of illustration. I am glad he is coming to Georgia this winter. It is a pleasure to know him, and a profit to hear him. A cordial greeting awaits him on this his first visit to the Atlantic Conferences. May the great Head of the Church come with him and make him a blessing.

If the Lord will, I shall be present at Atlanta and Thomasville, not as a Bishop, but as one of the preachers, to see and hear, to commune and enjoy. Oh! that the salvation of Israel may come out of Zion.

Carpets, though bought by the yard, are worn by the foot.

IT IS OUR OWN.

Mr. Editor: Homer College is the property of the Louisiana Annual Conference, and is located in the town of that name—the county seat of Claiborne parish, in north Louisiana.

Since the war between the States its fortunes have oscillated between the extremes of confidence and suspicion, prosperity and neglect. But for the energy of two or three preachers, and the heroic faith and generosity of the people of Claiborne parish, it would have been abandoned. They have encouraged the faculty and trustees to labor with hope and wait with patience, and the exercises have never been suspended for a day. During the last session not as many students matriculated as previously, and the expenses were hardly met; nevertheless, President Cobb stood in his lot and held his post like a sentinel on perilous guard. This vacillating support of an institution so deserving and important to the interest of our expanding Methodism ought not to be. For the education of young men it is the only hope of our church in a district of country whose radius is four hundred miles. Other organizations, secular and religious, look with covetous eyes upon the institution, and if they had such facilities would crowd its halls with students. The amount of money invested rolls upon the Conference for its use grave responsibility. The wants of a people who can be supplied from no other source, intensify the obligations of the church. The labors of the dead hang like a sweet perfume around its walls, and invite in their behalf to like diligence and consecration. Nor are the prospects of success unsatisfactory or uncertain. Bro. Upton, the Conference agent, has not been idle, nor dreaming over hopeless schemes. His industry and enterprise have increased the endowment, by the plan of last year, to about $35,000. Another movement has resulted in about $100,000 available capital to the college. A nucleus, and no mean one either, for a fine library has been secured. An apparatus sufficient for ordinary chemical and philosophical experiments has been obtained. The board of trustees are harmonious; the local patronage is becoming united and assured. Together with all this, a new president, fresh from a successful field, and holding the confidence of all north Louisiana, has been elected and will take charge on the first of January. I refer to Rev. J. Lane Borden. His success as an educator has been complete. Thoroughly qualified by collegiate discipline, with a strong reserve of natural ability, united with a passion for his vocation, the ability to govern, to acquire the affection and stimulate the application of his pupils, he will fill the place creditably to himself and his brethren. But while he can fill the president's chair alone, he cannot fill the college with students. The doing of the one prevents the other. Let us come to his relief and prop up Homer College. Nothing will pay better interest on our investments of care and labor. A flush school and a little time will enable the agent to increase the endowment to $500,000. We have the means if we will concentrate them, and to engage these resources we have the ability if it is consecrated.

This college is exclusively ours, and the church expects the preachers and membership of Louisiana to recognize their obligations and manfully discharge them. C. F. E.

IS IT RIGHT OR WRONG?

Mr. Editor: When a Christian asks himself, or is asked by others, this question in regard to any one of the many things upon which the sentiment of the church is divided, by what rule shall he be guided in answering?

Is conscience an infallible and sufficient guide, and are its decisions final? I am led to the consideration of these questions by the fact that many persons defend a doubtful course of conduct by the assertion that their conscience does not condemn them, and therefore they are guiltless. I do not think this a safe test. A heathen may be judged by his conscience; but we who have the written law will stand or fall by it. Conscience was given us to aid us in following the word of God, and not to become a higher law; and when it is thus perverted and made to bend to our inclinations it may become an instrument of Satan for our destruction.

If a person, bearing in mind the numberless admonitions of Scripture to sobriety of behavior, to plainness of dress, to separation from the world, to constant watching and prayer, ventures to remonstrate with a church member who indulges in all worldly amusements, and to all appearance is joined to the world, desires its approbation, and follows its maxims, he generally answers that he "does not see any harm in these things;" which he seems to consider a valid argument in their favor. I am convinced that one of the greatest errors of the times lies just here—that Christians, instead of earnestly and prayerfully studying the Bible for direction, trust to the leading of their own hearts.

It is in this way that most of the young people who join our church decide upon their course in regard to attending gay dancing parties, theaters, circuses and the like, card-playing, wearing costly and fashionable dress, and various other things which have long been opposed by Christians, but which now are approved by many church members. With irreligious persons these things are the natural outgrowth and expression of hearts unchanged by the grace of God, and it is in vain to point out to them the wrong in these external things till they are convinced of their heart-sin—their alienation from God. But it is far otherwise with Christians who are called to come out from the world and be separate, to whom the beloved disciple speaks thus: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Can the amusements, etc., mentioned be called anything but worldly? As one of our great men has said of dances: "They are the world's highest expression of its own worldliness." Mr. Wesley defines a good conscience to be "a divine consciousness of walking in all things according to the written word of God." It is this good conscience that I would urge young people to cultivate by a diligent study of God's holy book, and a firm determination to abide by its decisions in all things. G.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Twelve Views of Heaven. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., publishers.

This little volume is made up of twelve sermons, from as many distinguished evangelical preachers, and each one presenting some different view of heaven, or heaven regarded in some one peculiar aspect. It is a gem in workmanship, and a volume of unusual merit every way. The tone of all the discourses is consolatory and spiritual, and the work will delight and comfort all devout and afflicted souls.

Mr. Blake's Walking-Stick. A Christmas story for boys and girls. By Edward Eggleston. Chicago: Adams, Blackmer & Lyon Publishing Co. 1872. Sixty pages, 12mo, cream-tinted paper and illustrated.

Mr. Eggleston has become famous as a writer of fiction, and is a capital story-teller. This little volume is in his best vein, and will entertain and profit our young readers.

Our Sunday School Papers for December are out in good time, and they are all first-rate. Respecting their circulation and prospects Dr. Haygood says: "The following statement will show the aggregate circulation of our different Sunday school periodicals during the present year: Sunday School Magazines, 148,750; Sunday School Visitors, 591,300; Our Little People, 578,300; Lesson Papers, 924,000; total, 2,242,350. We take courage from this showing. We are sure that it might have been better had all helped as many did. But we are too grateful to our brethren—whose co-operation has been the condition of success—to scold even delinquents. We must thank our editorial brethren for great kindness in bringing before the public a knowledge of our plans and work. We shall begin our work for 1873 with better heart and hope than ever before. Above all things, we are comforted by the assurance—received from many 'true yokefellows' in the Lord—that the Sunday school publications of the church have been useful. Let us all do better next year."

Scribner's Monthly for December is a splendid number. Contents: New Ways in the Old Dominion; Divorced; A Peep at the Bird Shops; An Intruder; Arthur Bonnicastle; O'Murtogh; A Tramp with Tyndall; One of Miss Wedgery's Evenings; Finis Coronat Opus; At His Gates; Stories of the Irish Smugglers; The Demons of the Shadow; Mother Goose; Topics of the Time; The Old Cabinet; Nature and Science; Home and Society; Culture and Progress; Etchings; The Story of Arion.

Our Little People for 1872.—The weekly numbers for the entire year are bound together in paper cover, and make a handsome volume of ninety-six pages, and all for fifty cents. In this form the work can be preserved, and it will make an excellent volume for the children at home. Edited by Dr. Haygood. Published by Dr. Redford. Can be ordered from Nashville or New Orleans.

Good Things for the Young of All Ages is our well-known Good Words for the Young. The change in title is to be followed by various improvements. George Macdonald is the editor still. The November number has a fine table of contents, and is profusely illustrated.

We deeply sympathize with our dear old friend, the Rev. E. V. Levert, of the Alabama Conference, in his last sad bereavement. What a noble woman was his wife! Well, he will soon rejoin her in the Father's house. The Rev. J. Bancroft writes us, Marion, November 4: "I write you a brief note to inform you of the death of Sister Levert, wife of Rev. E. V. Levert, of the Alabama Conference. Her disease is thought to have been cancer of the stomach. She died at sixty-eight years of age, and peacefully breathed her last about midnight, Sabbath, November 3." We hope Bro. Bancroft will furnish us a memoir of this excellent woman.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The horse disease is probably about at its worst in New Orleans. Car lines are all suspended, and but few vehicles of any kind are seen on the streets. Arrangements have been made by which the leading staples are moved by steam trains and barges, so that our commercial interests are not likely to suffer seriously.

We deeply sympathize with our brother, Rev. S. H. Cox, of the Alabama Conference, in the death of his son, James Albert Cox, who died at Greensboro on the fourth of November. An obituary of this estimable and pious young man, prepared by President A. S. Andrews, will be found on our second page.

It is a matter of regret that neither the publishing agent nor the editor of this paper were able to attend the recent sessions of the North Alabama and the North Mississippi Conferences. Other work and engagements made it impossible.

Our News Column contains intelligence of the death of Horace Greeley. No American writer and journalist has ever exerted so wide and commanding influence upon the mind of the nation.

Dr. McFerrin reached New Orleans on Monday, the second instant, and left next day for the Texas Conference, Bryan, Texas, which was to have met on the fourth.

Caution.—Remittances should always be accompanied with instructions how to apply them. A brother sends money to Robert J. Harp, agent. It is placed to his credit on book account. The Advocate book-keeper never saw it except in the list of acknowledgments, and sends him the customary monthly statement, showing a balance against him. He writes, sarcastically perhaps: "Remitted at such and such dates." We refer to files of letters and find it even so, but that he had accounts with Book Concern and also with Advocate, and did not say on which one of them it should be credited. The amount due on one side of the house stood to his credit; on the other the discrepancy resulted from his neglecting to say "for Advocate." By giving us specific instructions our correspondents will save us much trouble.

Extent of Circulation.—The New Orleans Daily Times claims that its circulation is "Over double that of any other journal in the South." If the Christian Advocate be regarded as one of the "journals in the South," the Times is misinformed. Our opportunities for obtaining accurate information are equal to those of the publishers of the Times. Their circulation cannot be more than their issue. Their regular issue falls to between two and three thousand below the circulation of the Advocate, according to our information.

Chance for New Subscribers.—Paper Sent Till 1874 for $2.—Persons subscribing for the Christian Advocate at any time from the first of November, 1872, to the first of January, 1873, will have the paper sent to them till the first of January, 1874.

Wilson's Sewing Machine.—The Cleveland Daily Herald of January 30, 1872, says:

A word of advice concerning the purchase of a sewing machine will undoubtedly be appreciated by all, as it is seldom offered, and none who have not taken some pains to inform themselves on this subject are fit to judge which of the many first-class machines now in the market are the best. We think we have good evidence to prove that the New-Under-feed Wilson is to-day by far the most valuable sewing machine in use. At the recent Great Northern Ohio Fair it was decided to adopt a surer and more testing plan in awarding premiums to sewing machines, viz.: not to give them to the machine, for no committee is competent to tell, by simply looking at the machines, which is the most worthy of the premiums, but to award them by the work done on each of the respective machines. This is an actual test of the merits, and all the leading machines made an extra effort to excel in variety and quality of sewing machine work. The many thousand people who visited this hall decided, long before the committee made their report, to which the premiums should be given, and when the report was made it did not differ in the least from the unanimous conclusions of the public, for they unhesitatingly awarded all the premiums to the Cleveland machine, the "New Under-feed Wilson." This was a great victory, fairly won in the face of the strongest competition, and proves, beyond a question or a doubt, that the Wilson is to-day the superior sewing machine of America. The Wilson costs to manufacture fully as much as any other, but its manufacturers are less greedy, and sell it at a price within the reach of all.

American Mutual Insurance Company.—The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of the above-named company. The liberal and truly mutual policy adopted by them will doubtless secure a large patronage. We refer to the provision for the payment of premiums either semi-annually or annually, at the option of the insured, and the payment of dividends at the end of the year to insurers and stockholders, the same being equally apportioned.

Reliable and Responsible Jewelers.—We take pleasure in answering inquiries repeatedly made of us for reliable and responsible jewelers by reference to the advertisement of A. B. Griswold & Co., to be found in this issue. We could refer you to no firm on this continent which stands higher than the above-mentioned. Their house is located at the corner of Royal and Canal.

Apples, Onions and Seed Potatoes, at Joseph Keller's, No. 40 Poydras street. The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement, in this issue, of all the choice varieties of apples, onions and potatoes, to be found at the above establishment. Mr. Keller guarantees his purchasers or will refund. Orders receive prompt attention.

Students, and in fact all persons inclined to be literary, require, if they do not already possess, one of Noah Webster's unabridged dictionaries. Its merits are too well known to need discussing. We will but refer those desiring to procure one to the advertisement in another column. It is just the thing for a holiday gift.

Musical Instruments.—Among the oldest and most reliable dealers in musical instruments in the city are the Messrs. Zora & Bremer, whose advertisement appears in another column. They are located at 176 Canal street, where their imported and domestic instruments may be seen.

Boots, Shoes and Brogans.—At the corner of Ursulines and Dauphine streets (sign of the red boot) is the establishment of George John Wagner, dealer in all kinds of boots, shoes and brogans. See advertisement.

We call the attention of persons in search of a commercial education to Dolbear College, 201 and 203 Canal street, where ample arrangements are made to accommodate a large number of students.

Hats, Feathers and Flowers.—We call attention to the advertisement elsewhere of Louis George Asbury, No. 48 Royal street. The millinery department is ready to receive orders.

W. F. Clark, No. 134 Rampart street, manufacturer of carriages and buggies. Purchasers are invited to examine the carriages and buggies at the above repository.

The Continental Hotel, corner of Carondelet and Julia streets, is just now completed, and is offered for rent by George W. Roper. It is a very fine and eligible building.

Parties interested in Texas lands will observe the advertisement of Messrs. Bass & Co. They can be communicated with in care lock box 814, New Orleans.

Messrs. Navra & Offner, No. 176 Canal street, can furnish glassware and have it engraved with any design or initial that may be desired.

John H. Pope, druggist, corner of Jackson and Prytania streets, advertises, in another column, "Pope's cure for coughs, colds," etc.

Shirts.—Do not forget the shirt and general furnishing emporium of Colonel S. N. Moody, corner of Canal and Royal streets.

Joseph E. Ealer, watchmaker, No. 27 Exchange place, repairs watches, clocks and chronometers.

Married.

By the Rev. J. H. Stone, on the seventh of November, 1872, at White Sulphur Springs, Catahoula parish, Louisiana, Mr. John Enright to Miss Laura R., daughter of Dr. P. E. H. Lovelace, all of said parish.

By Rev. R. A. Sibley, July 3, 1872, in Smith county, Mississippi, Robert J. Varner to Miss Amanda J. Hailes.

By the same, October 17, 1872, in Smith county, Mississippi, Mr. F. A. E. Corley to Miss Matiloa J. Baykis.

By the same, November 14, 1872, in Smith county, Mississippi, Mr. R. L. Norlin to Miss Fannie E. Wicker.

Avoid Consumption.—No enemy to the human race is more to be dreaded and is more insidious in its approaches than the too fatal destroyer of health and happiness of myriads—"Consumption in its ghastly form." The duty of all is to guard against its first advances. This may be done by the timely use of Dr. Tutt's Expectorant.

Boston, February 9, 1870.

Dr. Tutt—Dear Sir: Will you please inform me of what druggist, in New York, I can get your Expectorant, as I can use some of it to advantage, having seen the effect of it on a friend of mine? I am fully satisfied that it has but to be tried to establish its merits. It works like magic. What is your wholesale price, delivered in New York? Let me know where it can be had for the present in New York, and I will communicate further with you at another time. Very truly yours, W. H. BARRON,

The Great Vegetable Restorative. "History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositories; but the cases actually relieved by Price's Bitters will live.

"Within the book and volume of the brain,
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such, indeed, is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters—no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh, prolific fields that heaven sows for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it falls with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

Coughs, Colds, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs.

This preparation was introduced many years ago, after consulting the views of several of the most prominent physicians of New Orleans regarding its formula. THE ROBIN'S STORY.

I built me a nest
On the great beech tree—
As cozy a nest
As ever could be.
I wove it with threads
To the beech tree bough,
And three little birdies
Are sleeping there now.

One day as I sang
My cheery cheer-cheer,
A spry little squirrel
Sprang up to the tree.
I thought he was coming
Right up on the bough;
It makes my heart tremble
To think of it now.

I flew like an eagle
Straight down through the air;
And soon he was running,
He could not tell where.
I pecked him and pecked him,
And flew in his track;
He'll stop to think twice
Before he comes back.

W. O. C., in the Nursery.

What Blind Folks Have Done.

Here are a few specimens: Homer, Ossian, Milton and Blacklock were poets. Sanderson was a celebrated mathematician and Lucasian professor at Cambridge (blind before he was one year old.) Euler was a mathematician. Huber was author of a work on the habits of bees. M. Pfeffel, of Colmar, was a poet; his works fill six octavo volumes. Miss Frances Brown was a poetess of considerable excellence. Holman traveled round the world. William Metcalf was a builder of roads and bridges. John Metcalf, of Manchester, was a guide to those traveling through intricate roads by night, when covered with snow; afterward a projector and surveyor of roads in difficult mountainous parts. Most of the roads about the Peak, and near Buxton, were altered by his direction. Milburn was chaplain for some time to Congress; is a writer, lecturer and traveler. Prescott was a famous historian. Goodrich was an excellent writer for the young. Rev. J. Crosse was vicar of Bradford. John Gongh, of Kendal, was a famous mathematician, and an accurate botanist and zoologist. Dr. Moyes, of Kirkaldy, was an itinerant lecturer on chemistry and optics.

That is certainly a very remarkable list, and the professor could no doubt have made it longer if he had chosen. It is not so very wonderful that a blind man could preach a lecture, but to build roads and bridges, and to talk about chemistry, and to lecture on optics without having sight, is certainly something very astonishing. Nothing but the most faithful application to duty would ever enable such men to succeed.

"I can tell you something about faithfulness in duty," says Captain Walker. "It is a story of

A FAITHFUL TIGER.

"An amusing scene once occurred at the citadel of Dover. The One Hundred and Second Regiment had a very fine tiger, which came to England with the regiment from India. He was very tame, and was daily taken for a walk, and he went round the mess table getting titbits. One day his keeper got the worse for drink, and made his way to the den, fearing detection. An officer, seeing that the man lay asleep, and the tiger sitting by him, sent for the picket, who, at any other time, could do what they pleased with the beast. The moment they attempted to go near the keeper the tiger growled, and very soon let them see they must keep off. For two hours the tiger kept guard over his keeper, who, on awakening, was surprised to see no one dared to come near his charge."

That tiger would have made a good policeman. No one could have run away with anything he was guarding.

"They had another sort of policeman in Cincinnati," says Dr. Beetle.

THE MONKEY AND THE BURGLARS.

"Two burglars in Cincinnati concluded to make a descent on the house of a gentleman in that city one night, but were ignorant of the fact that the gentleman kept a monkey. With eager curiosity the monkey watched them in their attack upon the house; and when they had penetrated as far as the kitchen he could stand it no longer, but gave a tremendous screech, followed by a prolonged ch-r-r-r-r, which curdled the blood in their veins. They didn't wait to see whence the unearthly sound proceeded, but fled in wild dismay, followed and spurred on, as they ran, by shouts of demoniac laughter from the monkey on the window-sill, so that they had no chance to pick up anything."—Methodist.

Young Stilt-Walkers.

Wouldn't you think it funny to see a baby three years old walking on stilts three or four times as long as she was herself? And not only walking with perfect ease, but dancing, playing the tambourine, and going through various other exercises, at the top of those fearful stilts? Well, you would not only see that—if you went to London—but you would see a good many other street performances that would seem very odd to you.

You must know that there are so many people to do the work of London that wages are very low, and the father of a family cannot always earn enough to support them. Often every one of the family, down to the baby, has some way of earning a few pennies to help buy bread. But though there are hundreds of trades at which people work that you never heard of, and many ways of earning a living that you would think horrible, still there is not work enough for all; so many people earn their bread by some show or street performance. You've heard of "Punch and Judy," and probably know it's a sort of play theater, where the actors are wooden dolls, whose owners move them and talk for them. I don't know how many dozens of these are traveling around London, but I will tell you about a different kind of street show:

There were two little girls, not very long ago, the daughters of a woman famous for walking on stilts, who were trained, almost before they could stand, to walk on stilts themselves. At three years old they had learned well enough to go into the streets to earn a living. Think of a baby of three earning its own living! The mother could really do marvelous things. She could stand on one stilt, take off the other, and go through a gun exercise, using the stilt as a gun, and all the time, you must remember, standing on one stilt. They are not made like our stilts; they are fastened tightly just below the knee, and the arms are left free.

It was a funny sight to see the mother and the two little girls, dressed in gay, spangled dresses, walking the streets on a level with the second-story windows. When they saw people interested, and thought they could earn something, they would stop, and go through their exercises. Of course they always drew a crowd; and when they finished, and handed around a tambourine, most everybody would give a few pennies.

Besides the stilts, these babies learned to walk and dance on a rope before they were six years old.

Now I want to tell you young folks a secret. These babies were no smarter than other babies. They learned their wonderful tricks by simply—practicing. All hours of the day—when just out of bed or just going to bed, before breakfast and after dinner, they always had their practicing tools by them, and very often they would try either to walk on the broomstick their father put between the rounds of two chairs, or to take some new step on the stilts.

Don't ever let me hear any child say "I can't," when babies can learn to walk a rope.—American Agriculturist.

The Growler.

The name given by the Jews to the bear means "growler," or "grumbler," from the peculiar noise it makes when seeking its food. There are several kinds of this animal; the one mentioned in the Scripture is called the Syrian bear. Its skin is covered with coarse hair of a yellowish-brown color. Its legs are short and thick, and its feet are armed with sharp claws. The food of this bear is chiefly wild berries and fruits, with the eggs and the young of birds. When fruits fail it will feed on any flesh it can obtain.

The bear chooses for its den a hole on the side of a hill, or cave in a rock, and sometimes the hollow of a large tree. It is said never to attack man unless provoked; but when enraged, it is very fierce. Raising itself on its hind feet, it seeks to squeeze its enemy between the fore legs, and many a fierce encounter travelers have had with this strong creature. Though its form seems clumsy, it climbs trees with ease, and swims with much skill.

Bears are very fond of honey; and in the north of Europe, when the natives find a tree in which there are wild bees, they hang a heavy log of wood by a string to one of the branches. The bear is tempted by the honey, and climbs the tree, but finds himself stopped by the log. He pushes it away with great force, when it swings back again, and gives the poor bear a terrible knock. In a rage he throws the log from him with greater violence than before, and back it returns, giving him a still harder blow. Not having the sense to understand that the pushing of the log is the cause of the blows he receives, he continues fiercely to push it away until he is killed, or falls stunned from the tree, when he becomes the prize of the hunters.

The great Northern bear lives chiefly on fish, which it procures from the rivers. A few years ago the fish became rather scarce, and the bears, pressed by hunger, boldly entered the villages. On one occasion a bear, seeing the door of a house open, entered it, and soon espied a kettle of boiling water. The bear smelt it, but burned his nose. Provoked at the pain, he vented all his rage on the kettle. He folded his arms around it, pressed it with his whole strength against his breast to crush it, but of course only burned himself the more. His growls and cries now brought some people to the spot, who soon shot Master Bruin. To this day, however, when anybody injures himself by his own folly the people of the village call him "the bear and the teakettle." Nor is the story without a moral to many passionate boys and girls in our land; for the indulgence of anger and passion is like taking fire into our bosoms to our own hurt.

In Germany the bear is often caught in a pit loosely covered with sticks and grass, on which a pot of honey is placed as a bait. A bear soon espies the tempting sweet, and rushes with delight to feast on it, when the slight covering gives way beneath his weight, and he falls into the snare. We pity the bear, but we should take heed to ourselves; for sin, like a pot of honey, often tempts us into paths which end in the ruin of the soul.—Child's Companion.

Housekeepers' Department.

COFFEE STAINS.—Pour on them a small stream of boiling water before putting the article in the wash.

GRASS STAINS.—Wash the stained places in clean, cold, soft water, without soap, before the garment is otherwise wet.

A FEW IRON NAILS placed in a vase of flowers will keep the water sweet and the flowers fresh. This arises from the sulphur eliminated from the plants combining with the iron.

FRUIT STAINS.—Boiling water will take out the stains of nearly all fruits, but on the juice of some, such as peaches, nectarines and blackberries, it seems to have but little effect.

TO BAKE A FOWL.—Prepare a fowl as for roasting, have the oven of good but not a raging heat. Lay the fowl on skewers; baste every five minutes, and manage the same as the roast. If young, it will bake in one hour.

BROWN BREAD.—Two-thirds corn meal, one-third rye or unbolted wheat flour, one coffeecupful of molasses to a pint of sour milk and three eggs, saleratus sufficient to sweeten the milk and ferment the molasses; the whole to be mixed quite soft; bake immediately, three hours; it is all the better if left in all night.

The Farm and Garden.

The Orange.

So much has been ably written on the culture of this fruit that it seems anything more would be superfluous; however, a few words as to what we are doing may not come amiss.

Much attention is being paid on the St. John's river to the orange, and it is thought that one-half of the orange groves, large and small, of this State that are available to commerce are located on this river. Some estimate that there are a quarter of a million trees set out, and many more people are going into the business. It is safe to say that by another five years there will be five hundred thousand orange trees on this river, and these, at an average of two thousand fruit each, and the low price of fifty cents per hundred fruit, would give us an income of $5,000,000, not an inconsiderable item.

Many, especially Northern people, have been sadly disappointed in their first efforts at establishing groves; injudicious management, such as taking the sour stocks from rich, dense hammocks, and transplanting them to weak pine lands and sun exposure; they of course died at once. Want of mulching and too much trimming down killed others. Then, again, two heavy frosts, or, more properly, freezes, in succeeding winters proved heavy dampers.

It is now proved by experience that when the sour stock is transplanted it should be to as nearly the same conditions of soil and sun exposure that it had in its native bed, and also that a loosely-twisted rope of the Southern moss that hangs so abundantly from our trees, wound around the stock from bottom to top and occasionally moistened, is very beneficial. Many are raising groves from the sweet seed direct, and are doing well, though it requires three or four years more to obtain fruit than when the sour stocks are depended upon. In the latter case about four years are required from the insertion of the bud to obtain good fruit.

Some new varieties are being obtained by careful culture, and some that are superior to the ordinary orange, both as regards size and flavor. The orange tree sends its alimentary roots, which are exceedingly numerous, to the immediate surface, and more care than is generally taken should be had that the ground in orange orchards is not hoed or cultivated over an inch deep. The best plan, instead of cultivating at all, would be to mow with the scythe closely and frequently, thus killing the weeds, and at the same time, in a measure, green manuring.

With a couple of queries I will close. Cannot a cross or hybrid be obtained between the sweet orange and the sweet shaddock or "grape fruit," thus combining the flavor of the first with the size and earliness of the latter?

And again, does not the sweet orange, when left to itself, retrograde—i. e., become wild, either sour or bitter sweet? I think it does, and that the fact is evidenced by our wild groves being almost entirely sour, and they must be the descent from seed planted by the Spaniards a century or two ago. They would hardly have planted sour seed exclusively.

Will some one give us their ideas on the subject?—D. Wallron, M. D., of Mount Royal, St. John's river, Florida, in Rural Alabamian.

Shoeing Horses.

The Charlier method of shoeing horses is attracting so much attention that we give an account of it. Theoretically, the device is intended to protect simply that part of the hoof which breaks by direct contact with the ground, at the same time preserving the natural form, structure, elasticity and functions of the hoof. To this end the lower edge only of the hoof is cut away, the instrument used being a drawing-knife, contrived for the purpose by M. Charlier. This operation makes a groove, in which a metallic rim is set, taking the place of the part cut off, and becoming a substitute for the rim furnished by nature. After a short time the metal will be even with the sole and frog, both of which are thus permitted to come in direct contact with the ground, as nature intended they should do. The frog is never pared, and soon becomes able to do its part in supporting the weight of the body. It soon becomes thick and flexible, decreasing the shocks to which the tendons are subjected upon hard roads. It is claimed, moreover, that when the frog is well developed it prevents the animal from slipping on ice or pavements, acting like the padded foot of a dog, cat or camel. With Charlier's shoe the sole of the hoof is never touched, and its horny development becomes healthy, strong, tough and able to resist contact with the sharpest stones. Many of our best horsemen are now agreed that all attempts to protect the sole from contact with the ground are misdirected, causing the bottom of the hoof to become more or less diseased. If these theories are correct we may expect to see the Dexters of the future adding some seconds to the fastest recorded time of to-day, while our common work-horses and roadsters will, in like manner, improve upon their present performances.

BUTTERMILK.—Persons who have not been in the habit of drinking buttermilk consider it disagreeable, because it is slightly acid in consequence of the presence of lactic acid. There is not much nourishment in buttermilk, but the presence of the lactic acid assists the digestion of any food taken with it. The Welsh peasants almost live upon oat-cake and buttermilk. Invalids suffering indigestion will do well to drink buttermilk at meal-times. So says one who ought to know.

MR. MOSES, of Geneseo, Illinois, commenced three years ago with shipping five tons of poultry to Boston during the winter. Last winter he shipped sixteen tons, and this winter, so far, he has sent off over thirty tons.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is appreciated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circulars and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $13. WITH WRINGER, $18.

MEDICAL.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

As an Invigorator, Liver Corrector and Blood Renovator, is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use. It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or overtaxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspepsia and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Purgative for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is permanent and lasting.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been clear and pleasant. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. There seems to be a general disposition to accept 3,400,000 to 3,500,000 bales as the probable crop. Receipts are curtailed by low water in the tributaries, and there is some apprehension of shipments from the interior being interrupted by the prevalence of the epizootic.

The river is 14 feet 11 inches below high water mark.

CORTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	17,220
Lake		12
Mobile		2,344
Texas		529
Total		20,103

On Saturday the demand was active throughout the day, and, notwithstanding a decline of ⅛c. at New York, prices were less irregular than on the previous day, many descriptions in fact being firmer, and factors realizing prices which they could not have commanded on Friday. The sales summed up 8,100 bales. On Monday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and took 6,150 bales at less irregular and generally stiffer prices, but without any quotable improvement. It was more difficult, however, to purchase at the inside rates of the previous day, and the general tendency was in favor of factors. This, however, does not apply to dingy, dusty and flimsy cotton, which continued neglected. On Tuesday the market opened with a good demand, and, although the movement was checked by the supply being only moderate and factors more stringent in their pretensions, yet 5,550 bales changed hands at full prices, which were stronger during the morning than later in the day, closing, however, very firm at previous rates, but with little or no more to be had at Monday's inside figures for low middling and middling. Operations were also checked by symptoms of renewed stringency in the money market, caused by the drain of currency to the country, and the unwillingness of banks and dealers to accept documentary bills without the bills of lading in hand.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 332,303 bales, against 258,205 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 253,353 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 27,207 to Great Britain, and an increase of 56,001 to France, and of 88,213 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	16¼ @ 16¾
Good ordinary	17¼ @ 17¾
Low middling	18 @ 18⅛
Middling	— @ 19

SUGAR.—On Saturday nearly 1,000 hhds., all the receipts, and including some from previous supplies, sold at 6⅛@7c. for common, 7⅛c. for good common, 7⅞@8c. for low fair, 8¼c. for fair, 8½@8¾c. for good fair, 9c. for fully fair, 9⅛@9½c. for prime, 10c. for strictly prime to choice, 10⅛c. for strictly choice, 9½c. for seconds, 10½@10¾c. for yellow clarified, and 11⅛@12c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the receipts comprised 2,292 bbls., which were nearly all sold at 48@50c. for fair, 51@52c. for prime, 53@54c. for strictly prime, and 55@56c. for choice.

CORN.—On Tuesday the supply was fair, with a moderate demand, and 2,700 sacks were sold, in lots, at 60c. for mixed, and 62c. for choice yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday the supply was fair, and 600 sacks were sold, in lots, at 43c. for prime, and 44@45c. ₱ bushel for choice.

BRAN.—The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 500 bags, in lots, at $1.15 for ordinary, and $1.25 for choice. On Tuesday the supply was good, but the market was quiet, and the sales were confined to 200 bags, in two lots, at $1.25 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday a lot of 100 bbls. mess sold at $14 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $13.75@14 ₱ bbl. for old and new.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was very dull, with only a retail business doing. Shoulders were quoted at 5⅛@5¼c., clear rib sides 8¾@9c., clear sides 9¼@9½c. ₱ lb.

HAMS—Continue very dull and prices are unsettled. On Monday 5 tierces choice sugar-cured hams sold at 18c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 10 tierces sugar-cured sold at 15¾c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 30 kegs packers' sold at 9½c., and 50 do. at 9¾c., 25 kegs choice refined at 10¼c., and 15 tierces refined at 8¾c. ₱ lb. Tierce is quoted at 8¼@8¾c. for choice packers' and refined, and kegs at 9½, 10@10¼c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday 10 casks shoulders sold at 5½c., and 30 casks clear sides at 7¾c. ₱ lb. A retail business is doing at 6c. for shoulders, 7¼c. for clear rib sides, and 7½c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Only a job business is doing. Western is quoted at 10c. ₱ lb. Northern 12@12½c. On Tuesday 50 boxes choice Western sold at 10c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113@113¼ (against 112¾ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates in both markets.

In silver we have noticed only retail sales. As we noticed last week, the general decline, as compared with gold in London and the Continent, has affected the New York market, and our own is nominal at the previous reduction.

MEDICINES.

EXPECTORANT.

DR. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT cures Coughs, Colds, Croup, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Pleurisy; is a prompt and certain palliative in Consumption, and all pulmonary and bronchial disorders, its action freeing the Lungs and Bronchial Tubes of irritating and obstructing matters, and healing the ulcerated surfaces.

TONIC VERMIFUGE.

DR. D. JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE is a remedy especially adapted to cure many of the ordinary ailments of children, and to save them from much suffering. It utterly destroys Worms, the great pests of childhood, and purges the system of them. Its valuable tonic properties remove General Debility, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia, restoring a good tone to the system, and strengthening the stomach and digestive organs.

AGUE MIXTURE.

DR. JAYNE'S AGUE MIXTURE is an unfailing curative for Fever and Ague, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, and all complaints of a like nature. It breaks up the chills, and assists in restoring the liver and digestive organs to a healthy condition. It also exercises a tranquillizing effect on the nerves, and has most excellent tonic properties, which enable it, when taken in conjunction with the Sanative Pills, to eradicate the disease.

SANATIVE PILLS.

DR. JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, known all the world over as a mild, prompt and effective purgative of established efficacy in Liver Complaint, and all Bilious affections, Headache, Disordered Stomach, Dyspepsia, Female diseases, and diseases of the Skin. MRS. M. G. BROWN'S

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture.

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloodstreaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head.
Prevents tightness and pains in the head.
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane.
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes.
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes.
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks.
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers,
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

HUMAN LIFE.

After awhile—a busy brain
Will rest from all its care and pain.

After awhile—earth's rush will cease,
And a wearied heart find sweet release.

After awhile—a vanished face—
An empty seat—a vacant place.

After awhile—a name forgot—
A crumbled head-stone—unknown spot?

RAIN-DROPS.

Tot is at the window-pane,
Watching little drops of rain;
Down the glass they pitter-patter;
Totty wonders what's the matter.
Thoughtfully she lifts her eyes
Upward to the darkened skies;
Earnestly and long she gazes;
Very sad her little face is,
As she turns and questions: "Why,
Mamma, do the angels cry?"

ANOTHER MYTH.

Another of the romantic delusions of our youth has been rudely swept away by the ceaseless and penetrating discoveries of this all-inquiring age. Already we have been forced to doubt the existence of a William Tell, and the exploits of a William Wallace; we are asked to believe that Lucrezia Borgia was, if not quite a model of medieval ladyhood, at least not much worse than other royal or noble ladies of her time; that Bacon wrote Shakespeare; that Aaron Burr was almost an exemplary character, and that Henry the Eighth was a fine specimen of the bluff and hearty, and by no means wicked, Englishman of his day. What the stump orators will do for a crushing simile, in place of that upon which they have drawn so liberally, and with so striking an effect, "the car of Juggernaut," it is difficult to tell. Juggernaut was a fine Oriental name and tradition, and Juggernaut's supposed office fitted exactly to the idea, vividly present to the stump orator's mind, that the opposite party was crushing and grinding down the people with corruption and tyranny. Unfortunately, Juggernaut—or, to spell the word more correctly, Jagan-natha—turns out to be a very harmless though still cumbersome old deity. He is a hideous and repulsive, but not ordinarily a destructive idol. He represents, in the Hindoostanee faith, the idea of incarnation, and is the visible image of Vishnu, the supreme god, presented thus uncouthly to the eyes of men. His history is to be found in the "Ramayana," the great epic of Hindoostan, and includes a romantic legend about Siva, Jagan-natha's wife, who was carried off by a giant, and was restored by the miraculous, though rather humble, aid of a monkey. In early July the festival of Jagan-natha is kept almost universally among the Bengalee Hindoos, and almost every town and village has its ponderous Jagan-natha car, which is dragged out for the occasion, the god and his faithful wife sitting aloft, carved in neem-wood and sandal-wood, and duly bathed, to the singing of the sacred "Ramyatra" hymn. Sometimes Siva, who is always represented as a trifle less hideous than her lord, is favored with diamond eyes, and robes of cloth of gold, while emeralds twinkle on her breast, and pearls beam from her enormous and crooked fingers. By accident, at the last festival at Serampore, two people were crushed under the wheels of the big car; and so unusual a catastrophe was this that the populace bitterly complained of Jagan-natha for so ungratefully repaying the efforts of his children to drag him forth from the temple. This Jagan-natha, it appears, was perched on a car some fifty feet high, with sixteen wheels, and it was with difficulty drawn to the traditional bath. The truth is that the custom of self-immolation under Jagan-natha's car has long been a thing of the past, the British authorities in India having found means to dissuade the Hindoos from the practice.—Appleton's Journal.

Woe to the world if it forgets Christ. Woe to the nation if it neglects thought and religion. Our halls of language and our halls of science will be hollow, and echo the chatterings of vanity, and will be inscribed by the finger of God with the sentence: Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin, unless Christ sits in the seat of the teacher and warms the heart of the people. There is no salvation to man or nation out of Christ.

If man or woman wishes to realize the full power of personal beauty, it must be by cherishing noble hopes and purposes; by having something to do and something to live for which is worthy of humanity, and which, by expanding the capacities of the soul, gives expansion and symmetry to the body which contains it.

There is dew in one flower and not in another, because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself, and the drop runs off. So God rains goodness and mercy as wide as the dew; and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

SCIENTIFIC.

Physicians say that more than two-thirds of the cases of sunstroke during the past heated term have occurred with persons who were in the habit of drinking liquor.

Another precious discovery has been made at the Prætorian camp—namely, a fine head of Juno, almost intact, and with a remarkable purity of outline. The nose (a remarkable occurrence) is nearly perfect, having only received a slight knock from the pick of the workman who lighted on it; but the little chip jumped off near the root, and does not destroy the beauty of the face. This valuable relic, brought to light in the excavations now going on for the enlargement of the Via San Lorenzo, appears to belong to the end of the second century, or beginning of the third.

A French Commission, consisting of three experts, Messrs. Boudet, Dubail and Adrian, has just made a report to the Pharmaceutical Society, in which, after reviewing all of the methods employed in the manufacture of absinthe, and the great loss of life entailed by its use in France and the colonies, they recommend that this article be included under the list of poisons, and that its sale be interdicted excepting by pharmacists, on prescription of a physician. They think its sale should be visited with heavy penalties, and that every effort should be made to break up the indulgence in an article possessing such poisonous properties.

Prof. Muller, in a course of lectures in Berlin, offered a simple and mechanical explanation of the universal admiration bestowed on circles. The eye is moved in its socket by six muscles, of which four are respectively employed to raise, depress, turn to the right and to the left. The other two have an action contrary to one another, and roll the eye on its axis, or from the outside downward, and inside upward. When, therefore, an object is presented for inspection, the first act is that of circumvision, or going round the boundary lines, so as to bring consecutively every individual portion of the circumference upon the most delicate and sensitive portion of the retina. Now, if figures bounded by straight lines be presented for inspection, it is obvious that but two of these muscles can be called into action; and it is equally evident that in curves of a circle or ellipse, all must alternately be brought into action. The effect, then, is that if two only be employed, as in rectilinear figures, those two have an undue share of labor; and by repeating the experiment frequently, as we do in childhood, the notion of tedium is instilled, a distaste for straight lines is gradually formed, and we are led to prefer those curves which supply a more general and equable share of work to the muscles.

New Theory of Volcanoes.—A theory has just been put forward respecting volcanic energy, by the eminent seismologist, Mallet, which promises not merely to take the place of all others, but to gain a degree of acceptance which has not been accorded to any theory previously enunciated. It is, in principle, exceedingly simple, and is thus stated by Mr. Mallet: "It is recognized by physicists that our earth is gradually parting with its heat. As it cools it contracts. Now if this process of contraction took place uniformly no subterranean action would result. But if the interior contracts more quickly than the crust, the latter must in some way or other force its way down to the retreating nucleus." Mr. Mallet shows that the hotter internal portion must contract faster than the relatively cool crust; and then he shows that the shrinkage of the crust is competent to occasion all the known phenomena of volcanic action. In the distant ages, when the earth was still fashioning, the shrinkage produced the irregularities of level which we recognize in the elevation of the land and the depression of the ocean-bed. Then came the period when, as the crust shrank, it formed corrugations; in other words, when the foldings and elevations of the somewhat thickened crust gave rise to the mountain ranges of the earth. Lastly, as the globe gradually lost its extremely high temperature, the continuance of the same process of shrinkage led no longer to the formation of ridges and table lands, but to local crushing down and dislocation. This process is still going on, and Mr. Mallet not only recognizes here the origin of earthquakes, and of the changes of level now in progress, but the true cause of volcanic heat. The modern theory of heat as a form of motion here comes into play. As the solid crust closes in upon the shrinking nucleus the work expended in crushing down and dislocating the parts of the crust is transformed into heat, by which, at the places where the work goes on with greatest energy, "the materials of the rock so crushed and of that adjacent to it are heated even to fusion. The access of water to such points determines volcanic eruption."

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

We desire to call the attention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and after a brief usage. There are many other advantages to which we could call attention, but our space will not admit. Catalogues and Price Lists, containing full particulars of this and other popular games, mailed to any address on application. Thirteen different styles of Croquet, from $1 to $20 a set. Address

THE PATENT BRIDGE

Whitworth Female College,

AT BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

The continued success of this institution is one of the best evidences of its merit. During the past term there were in attendance two hundred and twenty-nine pupils.

The members of the Faculty—eleven in number—are selected on account of their ability to teach.

Prof. Eckhardt, Music Director, has few equals.

Madame Julius, a Parisian lady of eighteen years' successful experience as a teacher, has been engaged to take charge of the French and Ornamental Department.

The very best care is taken of our pupils, both as to health and manners. Fires are provided for all.

No extravagance in dress is allowed.

The good health of Brookhaven is proverbial. Pupils from the miasmatic regions of Louisiana and Mississippi find this as healthful a school as can be found anywhere.

The charges are believed to be lower than in any school in the Southwest where similar advantages are afforded. Only from $230 to $265 for all expenses, excepting music, French and the ornamental branches.

No expense is spared in purchasing the most approved apparatus, maps, charts, etc., and all necessary school furniture.

Brookhaven is located on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, 128 miles from the city.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

The next term of this venerable institution opens on the first Monday in October, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
H. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College	$50 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department	40 00
Contingent expenses	5 00

 A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1872.

THE ALL-CONSUMING EVIL.

BY OVID MINER.

It is the purpose of this article to present the yearly cost, losses and wastes caused by intoxicating liquors to the material and moral interests of the country. The figures and facts following are copied from official documents, issued by the United States Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1871, and from documents published by the New York Legislature, for the year ending September 30, 1871. That these quotations are quite within the truth there can be no reasonable doubt, and as to the substantial justice of our own inferences and estimates we mean that there shall be no ground for distrust.

The treasury books show that there was imported during the fiscal year 1870 and 1871, of liquors, wines and cordials, 13,581,302 gallons.

Of this there was exported and consumed abroad 288,734 gallons.

Leaving for yearly home consumption, 13,292,568 gallons.

The retail cost of this, at ten cents a glass, or $6 per gallon, would amount to $79,755,408.

Domestic liquors were distilled during the same period to the amount of 62,300,000 gallons.

Exported and consumed abroad, 780,153 gallons.

Leaving for home consumption, 61,519,847 gallons.

Retail cost of domestic distillations, at $6 per gallon, $369,119,082.

Of fermented liquors (one third of which was brewed in New York) there were 7,000,000 barrels.

Retail cost of this at ten cents a pint, or $24 per barrel, would amount to $168,000,000.

Revenue officers believe that ten per cent. of all liquors, imported and home-made (in some sections of the country a larger percentage,) is concealed or smuggled, and escapes taxation. To give the whole amount of national dram-drinking, this should be added to the enormous aggregates above, but we set off the unknown quantity against what may be used in arts and as medicines. The direct yearly cost, therefore, to the people of this country, for intoxicating beverages, is shown to be: For imported liquors, $79,655,408; domestic distilled, $369,119,082; fermented, $168,000,000; total, $616,774,490.

The State of New York, with one-ninth the population of the republic, consumes one seventh of this ocean of fiery drink; thus bearing an annual liquor tax of $80,000,000.

And this is not all. There are in the States 146,000 licensed retailers (21,300 being in New York,) 21,500 wholesale dealers, and no doubt many more beer saloons than sufficient to swell the whole number of national dram-shops to 250,000. Supposing each of these establishments to require one assistant or clerk only, we have an array of 500,000 withdrawn from all productive or useful industry, and becoming at once the tempters and tempted, to idleness, dissipation, profaneness, gambling, etc. If the annual expense of subsistence of this great army were assumed to be $500 each, or if their probable earnings were estimated at so small a sum, then the country loses of its industrial forces and products, through liquor traffic, at the least, $2,500,000.

Careful statisticians have shown ample reason for the belief that there are a million of drunkards—the habitually intemperate—in the country. Estimating, however, the number at only 750,000, and their wages at $2 per day, and that they waste but half their time by hard drink, and the country thereby sustains an additional loss of $225,000,000.

In the fifty-six county poor-houses of New York, the six city almshouses, the hundred and three orphan asylums, and the seven institutions for juvenile delinquents, there were last year 86,000 paupers, helpless children and vagrants, and 101,000 of the same classes temporarily relieved by the public. The large numbers of needy and wretched, aided by private and Christian charities, are not taken into account; but no doubt three-fourths of the whole became burdens through their own or their parents' intemperance.

The criminal statistics of New York give the whole number of convictions by courts of record, in the several counties, for the year, as 2,151; convictions by courts of special sessions in the counties, 21,351, and convictions by courts of special sessions in the twenty large cities, 50,588; making 74,090 criminals of all grades. Three-fourths of these were led to crime by drink.

In respect to the above two items, it is fair to observe that New York suffers by comparison with sister States, by reason of the multitude of vagabonds and felons continually cast upon her territory from Europe. If the pauperism and crime in New York is one-sixth of all in the Union (though the State contains but one-ninth of the whole population,) then we must conclude that intemperance burdens the republic with at least 800,000 public paupers, who cost yearly $100,000,000.

And that an army of 300,000 rioters, thieves, burglars and murderers are recruited in dramshops, and sent forth to prey upon the people at a yearly cost of unknown millions.

As near as can be ascertained there are 10,000 insane persons in New York, and not less than 6,000 idiots. High medical authority instructs us that one-third of all this wretchedness comes from strong drink. How great an army of drunken mechanics and imbeciles are to be found in the whole Union can be only conjectured, but they must be numbered by thousands.

Let the sum total of our argument be now brought into one view:

1. Yearly retail cost of liquors, $616,814,490.

2. Labor wages, or value of time of dealers and clerks, $250,000,000.

3. Loss of productive industry to the country, of drunkards and tipplers, $225,000,000.

4. Public support of 800,000 drunken paupers and children, $100,000,000.

5. Costs of sicknesses by intemperance, nursing, physicians' bills and funeral charges of 60,000 drunkards, dying annually, unknown millions.

6. Taxation and expenses caused by 300,000 intemperate criminals, unknown.

7. Burdens of some 30,000 maniacs and idiots, unknown.

8. Value of all the domestic suffering, pains, shame and agony caused by liquor, beyond estimate.

9. Value of 100,000 American youth (12,000 of them from New York,) corrupted, brutalized and destroyed by drink every year, known only in eternity.

The material wastes and desolations caused to the entire country by the liquor traffic and dram-drinking, when expressed in figures, are absolutely appalling. And all this without compensating benefits to any permanent interest. The whole cost of State civil government in New York is $17,000,000 annually. Direct liquor tax upon the same people is much more than $80,000,000. The revenues of the United States, including heavy burdens for the war debt, are $400,000,000 a year, while the cost and resulting wastes from intoxicating liquors are immensely more than three times that amount, or $1,200,000,000 annually.

Let no one say that nothing effective can be done to remove this great evil. It is in the power of the Christian church to protect and save the youth from intemperance, and so remove a great share of this overshadowing curse. For this has been done. Two-thirds of the liquor-drinking has been banished from large sections of Maine, Massachusetts and Vermont, from single counties and towns in New York, Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, etc. Organized reform has been gaining much practical wisdom by the alternations of triumph and defeat in the recent past. And what has been locally or temporarily won to sobriety can now, by the divine blessing on self-denying, patient effort, be more widely and permanently gained.—Christian Weekly.

SCOTTISH WIT AND HUMOR.

The following anecdotes are taken from Dean Ramsey's work entitled "Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character:"

It is well known that the Scotch have always, ethically and legally, endeavored to enforce a stern outward observance of the Sabbath. This tendency often led to ludicrous results. A traveling artist, in a Sunday stroll, asked a Scotch peasant to tell him something of a ruin that he was passing in his walk. "It's no the day," said he, "to be speering sic things." This brings to mind an incident which was related to us in our boyhood. We had a friend who studied medicine in Edinburg.

Visiting a hospital on a Sunday morning, in company with his class and the professor, he came to a certain patient. It was feared that the patient was in danger of lockjaw, and, to test his condition, the professor desired him to whistle. "The Lord forbid," said the patient, "that I should do so on God's blessed Sabbath."

On the first introduction of Tractarianism into Scotland the full choir service had been established in an Episcopal church where a noble family had adopted those views, and carried them out regardless of expense. The lady who had been instrumental in getting up these musical services was very anxious that a favorite female servant of the family, a Presbyterian of the Old School, should have an opportunity of hearing them. Accordingly she very kindly took her down to church in the carriage, and, on returning, asked her what she thought of the music, etc. "Oh, it's varra bonny, varra bonny; but oh! my lady, it's an awlu' way of spending the Sabbath." This puts us in mind of a Scotch old lady whom we heard of twenty years ago in Newburg, New York. She belonged to the Presbyterian Church, and was very liberal in its support. Instrumental music was not then common in most churches. The Newburg Presbyterians decided to introduce it into theirs. But how would the Scotch lady take it? She was a Jenny Geddes in her way, and intensified by exile in all her prejudices. So the choir determined to be cautious. They merely introduced a bass-viol at first, which they supposed would be lost to the old lady's deafness in the mass of the harmony. But for the slightest sound of horse-limir and catgut in meeting the old lady had the ear of a hare. She called immediately on the minister. "Sae," said she, "ye hae got a fiddle in the kirk!" "O madam," he said deprecatingly, "only an instrument to regulate the voices." "Weel, weel," she replied, "ye may fiddle yersels to the Deil, gin it pleases ye; but ye shuna fiddle me alang wi' ye;" and she angrily darted out of the room. The fiddle or the lady must go, and the fiddle went.

Here is a piece of unconscious humor. A benevolent lady in one of her visits asked a poor woman if she ever went to church. "Ou, ay," she replied; "there's a man ca'd Chalmers preaches here, and I whiles gang in and hear him, just to encourage him, puir body!" We heard in Scotland a story in connection with the doctor's name almost as good as this. The great preacher was once during his sermon annoyed by some dogs in the church. He stopped, and ordered them to be turned out. When service was over one old woman said to another: "An' how did ye like the doctor the day?" "Ach, but he was grand!" she replied. "Did ye understaun' him?" inquired her companion. "The Lord forbid," she answered, "that I should hae sic presumption; but wasn't he bonnie on thae dogs?"

In the religious element of Scottish humor we see the keen moral sense of the people; and this is often felt in the sarcastic rebuke which their sayings often administer to levity or impiety. A young man, going from home, was making a great fuss about his preparing to leave and the putting up of his habiliments. His old aunt was much annoyed at all this bustle, and stopped him by the somewhat contemptuous question: "Whaur's this you're gaun, Robby, that ye mak sic a grand wark about yer claes?" The young man lost temper, and pettishly replied: "I'm going to the Devil." "Deed, Robby, then," was the quiet answer, "ye needna be sae nice. He'll juist tak ye as ye are." We quote another saying, full as good. A man was fiercely denouncing the doctrine of original sin. "Mr. H.," said a neighbor to him, "it seems to me that you needna fash yoursel' about original sin; for, to my certain knowledge, you have as much actual (actual) sin as will do your business." If these and other sayings evince sharpness and sagacity, we find many sayings that evince much simple-mindedness. We give an instance. A man and his wife fell on a Sunday evening into a critical dispute. The wife said she thought David (King David) hadna ta'en much pains when he metered the Psalms. On which the husband flew into a passion at her ignorance, and reminded her that it was George Buchanan who metered the Psalms."

With most men life is like backgammon—half skill and half luck. O. W. Holmes.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

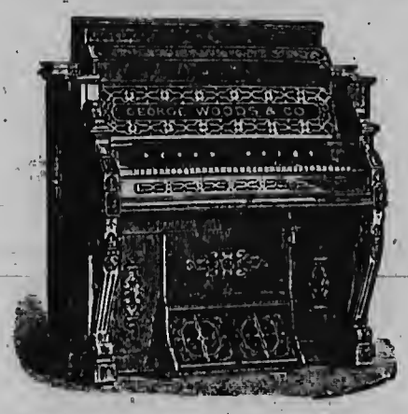
possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.



IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & CO. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1872. NO. 50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The interior of the Church of the Divine Paternity presented to-day a somber and beautiful appearance. The pulpit was heavily draped in crape, and long lines of crape were suspended from every pillar and every abutment of the beautiful gothic interior. The several offerings in the church were exquisite in design and appropriateness. The principal among them were the following:

"I know that my Redeemer liveth"—red on white ground and green border.

At the rear of the pulpit was a sheaf of wheat from Chappaqua, in the form of a crown, and suspended overhead was a pen and an ax Around the pulpit were innumerable offerings of flowers and wreaths In front of the pulpit was a beautiful design of flowers, with the words "It is done," on white ground, purple letters and green border. On the tablet to the left of the pulpit was a floral wreath bearing the letters "H. G." Then there was in flowers a plow from the Tribune office, a quill from the German Greeley Club, a basket of flowers with a crown and cross from the Lincoln Club, and floral offerings from Lotus, Arcadians, Herald and other clubs.

As early as nine o'clock the crowd flocked to the church, but only those having tickets succeeded in gaining admission. By ten o'clock the galleries which had been reserved for the ladies were crowded.

About a quarter before eleven President Grant entered, and immediately following him were Senator Henry Wilson, Minister Washburne and Secretary of War Belknap. They took seats on the right of the pulpit. There were also present Carl Schurz, Lyman Trumbull and Vice President Colfax. Mr. Colfax took a seat next to the President.

Promptly at eleven o'clock the funeral procession started from Mr. Sinclair's house, on Forty-fifth street. Many affecting scenes took place there during the morning. Mr. Greeley's daughters were inconsolable in their grief. The corpse was borne by ten men; next came the clergymen, mourners, and then the Tribune Association; next the Herald Club; then followed in succession military and civil officers of the United States located in this city and adjoining cities; officers of the government of the State of New York, and of other States, now in this city; the mayor and members of the Common Council of New York; mayor and members of Council of Brooklyn and Jersey City, Long Island City, Newark and Elizabeth; representatives from Philadelphia, Baltimore and other cities; then came the judges from all courts, and a line of citizens of immense length.

At twenty minutes past eleven the procession entered the church. The solemnity of the scene was of the most impressive character. The stillness was such that it seemed as though the people in the church scarcely breathed. Among those present were Postmaster General Cresswell, General Dix, Governor Morgan, General Sheridan, Governor Randolph, of New Jersey, and a committee of twenty from the Union League Club. The Rev. Dr. Chapin opened the funeral ceremonies by reading selections from the Scriptures, many of the allusions being peculiarly appropriate to the character of the departed. Miss Clara Louise Kellogg next sang very touchingly:

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

After which Henry Ward Beecher delivered the funeral oration.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec 7.—The war with the Malvin Indians, in Oregon, continues. Two additional soldiers have been killed. Soldiers are marching from three points to the scene of conflict.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 8.—The horse disease is on the increase here. Nearly all the horse cars are withdrawn. Meetings will be held to-morrow for the purpose of organizing a volunteer fire department.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Attorney General Ogden, of Louisiana, appeared before the Supreme Court this morning and asked for a writ of prohibition against Judge Durell, restraining him from proceeding further in the case of Kellogg vs. Warmoth, in the Circuit Court for Louisiana.

Mr. Ogden asked for the immediate consideration of the motion, remarking that the very life of the State was involved in the controversy.

Mr. Phillips, now of Washington, before the war a member of Congress from Alabama, is associated with Mr. Ogden in the case. He made a few remarks intended to satisfy the court that it was a proper case for the issue of the writ.

Judge Miller asked how it could be a proper case when the Constitution of the United States expressly provides that a case wherein a citizen was a party should not be a case for its issuance.

The court took the motion under advisement.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—In the case of Kellogg against Warmoth, which was before the Supreme Court of the United States on Monday, the court to-day granted leave to file the petition, and ordered that the arguments on the motion for a rule to show cause against Judge Durell be heard on Monday.

BOSTON, Dec. 10.—The day after the death of Mr. Greeley several well-known gentlemen in Boston held a consultation for the purpose of forming a Greeley National Monument Association. The organization has been nearly completed. It is not confined to Boston, but will embrace well-known citizens of all parts of the country. It is proposed to raise $500,000, of which $175,000 has already been guaranteed.

H. L. Pierce, Republican and Citizens' candidate, is elected mayor.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 4, 6 P. M.—Large portions of the city are in darkness to-night, the gas having been extinguished in many sections. Inhabitants are filled with consternation, and irritation against the striking stokers is very great.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The vote in the Versailles Assembly to-day, on the formation of the Dufaure committee, excited the liveliest apprehensions in Paris, where fighting is expected.

The greatest excitement prevails at Chiselhurst.

Marshal McMahon controls the army, but will act only in obedience to the Assembly, not to Thiers.

German reoccupation is certain if fighting occurs.

Correspondence which has recently passed between Bismarck and Napoleon goes to show that German reoccupation will result in the re-establishment of the empire.

The strike of the stokers of the gas companies continues, but the worst is over. The inhabitants have supplied themselves with oil lamps and candles, and are now able to meet the inconvenience occasioned by the limited supply of gas. Several of the theaters were lighted with oil last night, and the performances conducted as usual. The Strand last evening was lighted with burning lime.

CITY OF MEXICO, via Havana, Dec. 8.—Lerdo de Tejada was declared elected President on the sixteenth of November, and on the eighteenth a decree to that effect was published, when the diplomatic corps visited him in an unofficial capacity. To-day the new President took formal possession of his office, and to-morrow the diplomatic corps will make an official visit.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—A terrific westerly gale, causing great destruction to property of all descriptions, prevailed yesterday throughout England. Telegraph wires were prostrated and many buildings demolished. Others were damaged in this city. A large number of pedestrians were dashed to the ground by the violence of the hurricane, and street lamps and advertising boards were blown down and many persons injured by the flying debris.

Two Companies of U. S. Troops Take Possession of the State House.

THE ORDER OF JUDGE DURELL.

At two o'clock on Friday morning Deputy United States Marshal F. W. DeKlyne, with two companies of United States troops (Companies L and F of the First Regiment of Artillery) proceeded to the State House, New Orleans, and, directing some half a dozen policemen left in charge of the premises to vacate, took possession of the building.

Sentinels were at once posted at the entrance, and since then no one has been admitted. At nine o'clock one of our reporters visited the State House and saw Mr. DeKlyne.

That gentleman informed him that his action was in obedience to an order from the United States Circuit Court, which he exhibited.

The following is a copy of the order of court:

"Circuit Court of the United States—Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana. In equity, 6,830. William P. Kellegg vs. H. C. Warmoth et als. Whereas, Henry C. Warmoth, one of the respondents herein, has, in violation of the restraining order herein, issued the following proclamation and returns of certain persons claiming to be the board of returning officers, all in violation and contempt of the said restraining order, as follows, to wit:

* * * * * * * * * *

(Proclamation of Election.)

* * * * * * * * * *

"Now, therefore, in order to prevent the further obstruction of the proceedings in this cause, and, further, to prevent a violation of the orders of this court, and the imminent danger of disturbing the public peace, it is hereby ordered that the marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana shall forthwith take possession of the building known as the Mechanics' Institute, and occupied as a State House for the assembling of the Legislature therein, in the city of New Orleans, and hold the same subject to the further order of this court, and meanwhile to prevent all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said pretended returning officers in contempt and violation of said restraining order; but the marshal is directed to allow the ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same.

"E. H. DURELL, Judge.

More Lawless and Incendiary Violence.

To call the proceedings of the body which was convened by Judge Durell yesterday, at the Mechanics' Institute, under protection of the United States bayonets, revolutionary, would be too mild an expression of the lawless violence and reckless madness of this incendiary and felonious assemblage. It would appear that the height of audacity had been reached in the attempt to make such an assembly the Legislature of Louisiana—in the admission of fifty-eight negroes as the representatives of the people, some of whom were not even candidates for the offices, many of whom received small minorities, and all of whom were rejected by the honest and peaceful suffrages of the people.

Fifty-eight negroes, not ten of whom can write their names, were thus by a bill in chancery placed in the House of Representatives, and ten in the Senate. All by the motion of William Pitt Kellogg, who, during this whole contest, has pretended and succeeded in making some credulous people believe that he intended to put down negro rule in Louisiana.

This pretended Legislature had hardly been organized before some negro in the House proposes a resolution to impeach Governor Warmoth, which is adopted, is sent to the Senate, and there another resolution is passed recognizing Pinchback as Governor, who immediately proceeds, at the head of a mob, to batter in the doors of the Governor's office, to force open his drawers and desk, and to occupy his rooms.

All this is done under protection of the United States troops and by authority of a decree of a United States judge.

All done, too, in flagrant violation of the law of the State, which has never been repealed, and which requires that no officer of the State can be impeached except on memorial and affidavit, setting forth charges against him, and after an investigation and hearing of witnesses by a committee of the House, with a regular summons and appearance of the officer accused.—Times, December 10.

FROM THE WORK.

SPAINOVILLE CIRCUIT, SHREVEPORT DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Lord has greatly blessed us on this circuit this year. We have had fifty-five conversions and seventy-three accessions to the church. The old membership was wonderfully blessed. We have built two church houses, worth three or four thousand dollars. But the finances of the circuit are in a very poor condition. Owing to the low condition of Red river people cannot ship their cotton, and unless we have navigation soon the preacher will not be able to get to Conference. W. D. STAYTON.

OPELOUSAS DIST., LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As the Conference year is drawing near its close, permit me to say, for the information and encouragement of the church, that there is peace in all our borders; we have no cumbersome debts overhanging us; our Conference collections are being faithfully attended to with success; and, better than all, largely over three hundred have been added to our fold in this district during the year. We have three fresh, zealous, educated Christian men with recommendations to be admitted on trial in the traveling connection. The field is greatly enlarged, and our need of more laborers in this part of the work is seriously felt.

I am pleased with Bishop McTyeire's speech on Church Education. Thirteen years ago, at Mansfield, such was called "utopian." This field can never be successfully cultivated while our children are educated in convents. There is no possible remedy but for our church, through her ministry, to establish schools in every town, equal to the educational wants of the people. This is the course pursued in China and among the Indians. If found necessary there, how much more important here, where schools are established, the first great object of which is to educate our children from us, not for us. Yours in Christ, B. F. WHITE.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

Memphis Conference.

We take the following items from the Western Methodist:

The thirty-third session of the Memphis Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South began in the courthouse, Somerville, Tennessee, on Wednesday morning, November 20, 1872.

Bishop Wightman led in devotional exercises.

The report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals was presented, and, having been read, was adopted.

Upon the motion to adopt the report an address was made by Dr. Green, who was followed by the Bishop, each of them urging that assistance be rendered in the erection of the new Publishing House In response to Dr. Green's appeal for $1,000 to complete and furnish the Bishops' room in the building, subscriptions and cash were obtained to the amount of $1,119.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance was presented, and, having been read, was adopted. The amount necessary for the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of preachers, $1.400; collected and applied, $1,850 60.

The report of the Conference Board of Missions was presented, and, having been read, was adopted. Contributed to missions, $4,434.

The report of the statistical secretary was presented, and, having been read, was adopted. This report furnishes the following aggregate: Members, 28,254; local preachers, 285; adults baptized, 1,942; infants baptized, 704; churches, 420; parsonages, 11.

Virginia Conference.

The seventy-eighth annual session of the Virginia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was commenced in the Washington Street church, Petersburg, November 19, at half-past ten o'clock, Bishop Robert Paine presiding. A large number of ministers and lay delegates were present, and many visitors were in attendance to witness the proceedings of the body.

Bishop Paine, in opening the exercises, read a portion of the ninth chapter of Acts, after which the two hundred and seventy-second hymn was sung, commencing:

"And are we yet alive?"

The Bishop then offered a fervent prayer to the throne of grace, earnestly invoking the divine blessing upon the Conference and its work, and besought a special benediction on the charges during the absence of those accustomed to minister to them in holy things, on the church in general, and on the prayers and labors of the servants in extending the knowledge of divine truth.

The roll of clergy and lay delegates was then called by the secretary, Rev. Paul Whitehead, and one hundred and two ministers and eighteen lay delegates answered to their names.

LECTURE FOR THE BENEFIT OF RANDOLPH MACON.

The Bishop introduced to the Conference the Rev. A. T. Bledsoe, editor of the Quarterly Review, Baltimore, who was received with a rising vote. Dr. Bledsoe thanked the Conference for the reception extended him, and said that the object of his visit to Petersburg at this time was two-fold, viz.: to meet and to make the acquaintance of the Conference, and to deliver a lecture for the benefit of Randolph Macon College. The subject selected for him is:

"WHY I BECAME A METHODIST."

It was not one of his own choosing, because he would be compelled to speak more of himself than he desired, but he would endeavor to give a simple, truthful statement of the reasons that induced him to become a Methodist.

BISHOP EARLY.

Rev. R. N. Sledd stated that he had a message to the Conference from Bishop Early. The Bishop was in a more feeble condition than ever before. He was not able to rise from his bed, nor to walk across his room, unless supported His death might be at any time expected. He desired his affectionate regards to be communicated to the Conference, whose welfare in all respects he had in constant memory and prayer. He was himself at perfect peace with all the world and his Maker. He had great faith in the prayers of the saints, and hoped to be remembered by them. He had at one time hoped to attend the session of the Conference, but had been compelled to relinquish the idea. He had been only once to church at Lynchburg for twelve months past. He was perfectly ready and prepared to depart when summoned.

Bishop Paine said he had called on Bishop Early when he passed through Lynchburg, and found him perfectly resigned and prepared for the final summons.

The following resolution, offered by Rev. P. A. Peterson, was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, We have received from our venerable and beloved Bishop Early a message conveying to us the assurance of his interest and affection for the members of the Conference, and also expressing his abiding faith in God and submission to his will; therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our honored and beloved Bishop in his bodily affliction, and assure him of an interest in our prayers for both his temporal and spiritual welfare, and especially that God may abundantly sustain and comfort him in his declining years, and at last vouchsafe to his long and useful life a peaceful and triumphant close.

P. A. PETERSON,
R. N. SLEDD.

REPORT OF THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY.

Rev. A. G. Brown, financial agent of Randolph Macon College, submitted his annual report, from which we learn that the assets and liabilities of the institution are as follows: Available assets, $58,729 55; assets not now available, $24,603 70; total assets, $83,333 25; liabilities, $23,216 49.

RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

The receipts and disbursements of the college from January 1 to November 1, 1872, are thus reported: Receipts, $21,763 89; disbursements, $17,691 45; cash balance on hand, $4 072 44.

Mr. Brown stated that no money has been borrowed for the institution, but that its expenses are more than met by its receipts. All the salaries of officers and teachers are paid promptly, and all bills met on presentation. The patronage has largely increased. There are now two hundred and eleven students at the college—one hundred and forty-two more than were in attendance the corresponding day last year. Thirty-nine of these are studying for the ministry, and twenty-seven are the sons of itinerant ministers; sixteen are on scholarships; one hundred and twenty-four pay full tuition fees, and eighty-two pay no tuition fees.

ANNIVERSARY MISSIONARY MASS MEETING.

At the anniversary missionary mass meeting to-night the opening exercises were conducted by Rev. E. M. Peterson. There was a large audience. Dr. John E. Edwards presided, and announced the character of the meeting. He said that outside of foreign missions last year the appropriations for home missions were $6,000. There are several mission fields in the Conference, from all of which encouraging reports had been received. He regretted that the report of the treasurer would not meet the appropriations made at the last Conference, and said that without a liberal collection to-night the mission board would not be able to pay seventy-five cents on the dollar. The great mission of the Conference is the German mission under the superintendence of Rev. E. N. S Blogg, which has the strongest claims on our beneficence.

J. M. Bain, Sr., of Portsmouth, read his report as treasurer, which shows that $6,638.68 has been collected in the different charges during the year. Richmond district was assessed at $1,200 and paid $1,422.94 The collections the present year exceeded those of last year by $2,250.

STATISTICS REPORTED.

Periodicals taken, 2,794; money raised for poor, $4,203.34; money raised for ministerial education, $818.23; money raised for other objects, $4,668; number of church edifices, 464, which will seat 137,860 persons; value of churches, $871,125; number of parsonages, 37; value of parsonages, $83,706; value of other church property, $13,550 57; number of white members, 43,279; number of colored members, 599; number of local preachers, 177; number of adult baptisms, 2,069; number of infant baptisms, 1,040; number of Sunday schools, 553; number of officers and teachers, 5,620; number of scholars, 39,446; number of volumes in library, 61,947; number of Sunday School Visitors taken, 4,088; value of requisites, $18,072; moneys expended in Sunday schools, $8,000; collections during the year for missions, about $7,000; for Bishops, $1,472 27; for Conference collection, $5,712 48; for superannuated preachers, $74.65; for education, $2,258.64.

FROM CALCASIEU PARISH, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Some notice of missionary operations from the extreme southwestern portion of our State may not be amiss. The last Conference honored one who felt his weakness, and in truth his unworthiness, with the high post of missionary in these parts, but to the best of his ability the trust has been executed. Much was required. The field was large, and after a careful survey work was undertaken in such a manner as to cultivate well. There were two churches within the limits marked out, but no intelligible record of either. Members had gone away without letters; others had died and there was no trace of them. After painstaking, one hundred and twelve were found who had been received into the church in other times. But how cold! Conformity to the world had rusted their armor, and they were more fit for the hospital than for the battle field. The work at the present has five churches, four of which are in a lively condition, and one with bare evidence of life. The latter, like too many of our churches, has sickened from the contagious epidemic, to wit: spiritual lockjaw. In three of them the remedies prescribed were cheerfully taken, and the treatment faithfully remembered. Result: perfect health. There are three prayer meetings each week at one, arranged as follows: Tuesday for the young men, Wednesday for the church and Thursday for the lambs. It would do you good, my brother, to be at these meetings—the mouths of babes, of young men and old men perfecting God's praise. The shout of joy, the face lit up with heavenly peace, and eyes dimmed with tears are seen on every side. Seventy-two have been added to the church, and I am happy to say that I do not know one who has not passed from death unto life. Their fruits speak and show the power of the Spirit.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference made glad the hearts of father and mother. Whole families came into the service of Jesus. Our elder brother, B. F. White, was there and did good service. With him came Bro. J. W. Williams and Bro. Huffpower. These brethren were constant in labors, but were compelled to leave before the meeting closed. Had they witnessed the Spirit's outpouring on Sabbath and Monday nights their hearts would have been gladdened. Thirty-one were truly converted. Each church has its book, knows its members, and the local brethren are earnest, pious men. Bro. Monroe, local deacon, is full of zeal and love; Bro. Pilley, local preacher, is doing good, and would grace any pulpit; Bros. Coody and Blocker are young men of promise, and have fruit-seals to their work; and good Bro. Garlington preaches Christ by the roadside, at the fireside and in all places. The eye of the Lord has cared for his people here—not one called away this year. Health has been good, crops short, trials many; but when the toil is over, trials put away and sin consumed, there will come the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

Yours in the gospel, T. M.

FROST FLOWERS.

While we are sleeping, stealthily creeping,
They come, as the green comes in early spring;
Here there's a vine or root, here shows a tender shoot;
Faintest of pencles, of ghostly roses,
Within this garden are blossoming.

What busy sprite, at the dead of night,
Scatters the seeds of these magical weeds
Frond of lily and flower of filly
Breathing out only an odor chilly;
Ferns that keep, in their sculptured sleep,
A memory of June's warm, spicy noons,
Of her starlit hollows and building swallows,
Of her waxing and waning moons?

But now that summer's smile has fled,
And all her pomp and bloom lies dead,
Lo! the souls of her flowers, again,
That reappear on my window pane,
Blooming at night in a splendor of white,
To fade away in the strong sunlight!

WHAT IS FAITH?

We answer: Faith is the gift of God and the act of the creature united, just as reason and knowledge are his gifts united in the human mind. Without faith there could not be either reason or knowledge, and therefore there could not be any mind at all. Hence it is very clear that faith is an attribute of the human mind, as well as the gift of God. In this sense children have faith when they are quite young. So soon as they can walk and talk it is perceivable. If you say to the little boy, "Come here, my son, I will give you my knife," he will come because he believes you will do what you have promised. This is faith, and all men and women that have intelligent minds have this degree of faith; and their faith may be either strengthened or weakened, according to the evidence on which it rests. Hence there is strong faith and weak faith; there is the faith of a little child and the faith of the grown man, the faith of the heathen and the faith of the Christian.

In Christians themselves this rule will hold good. Their faith is weakened or strengthened by evidence, just in proportion to their reception or rejection of that evidence. It is in this way that we account for the fact of there being weak faith and strong faith among Christians. The former class rejects the evidence, while the latter receives it. The tendency of the unbelief of the former is to infidelity, but the tendency of the belief of the latter is to Christianity. It is in this way that we account for the fact of having so many backsliders and skeptics among us in the church of God. We all have faith given us that have rational minds; we all have the same evidence to prove the Christian religion true; we all have the same Holy Spirit to enlighten our minds; we all have the same Bible to read, and we all may be true Christians if we will, and be saved in heaven above. We need not wait in our sins till God gives us faith to save us, as many have believed and taught, and now believe and teach, which is a great error and has destroyed and is destroying very many precious souls.

Many have waited in their sins for this supposed precious gift of faith, and have died in their sins, we fear, without it. This will be the certain doom of all those who are now waiting in their sins for this supposed degree of faith, that will force them to be Christians. If they continue to wait under this fatal delusion until they die, they will die also in their sins without it; because God never has nor never will force any man to believe and be saved. Men will be condemned and sent to hell because they would not believe the gospel, and not because God has failed to give them faith to enable them to believe it. All men who have rational minds have the degree of faith of which we now speak. They all have the power to believe or not believe; and this, we all know, is true, because it is clearly demonstrated in our daily transactions in this life with our fellowmen. If a man says a thing is true we at once decide it to be true or false, or as doubtful.

So, likewise, it is in believing the gospel. The gospel is declared by divine inspiration to be true. We have the power to believe it true or false, or as doubtful. Some profess to believe it false. If they continue in their unbelief they must be lost; there is no chance for them to be saved. Others profess to believe it doubtful; they also must be lost if they continue to doubt, because he that doubts is damned. Others believe the gospel to be true, but their wills are so perverted and their minds so blinded by sin that they are not willing to obey the gospel. These also must be lost if they continue in disobedience. Others believe the gospel and obey the gospel; and their faith, being a living, active principle when exercised and improved, leads to conviction for sin, and this conviction for sin leads to penitence, and this penitence leads to a firm resolve to forsake sin, and with tears and prayers and self-abhorrence the man "forsakes his wicked ways and his unrighteous thoughts, and turns to the Lord, that he may have mercy on him, and to our God, who will abundantly pardon." Every step he takes in this direction his convictions become stronger and stronger, deeper and deeper, until he reaches the point of self-despair. He now despairs of saving himself by his own works, for he grows worse and worse under his own treatment. The treatment of all other human agencies has failed also, and he renounces them all as useless. The man feels in his heart that die he must without speedy relief, and he cries out in this agony of soul: "What shall I do to be saved?" "Who shall deliver me from this body of death?" And the Holy Spirit whispers: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." The humble, weeping, penitent soul exclaims: "Lord, I do believe; help thou my unbelief." He at this point turns his case over from himself, and all other human agencies, into the hands of Jesus Christ to save him. Every other consideration to save him is lost sight of but Christ and him crucified, and the language of his troubled and almost bleeding heart is: "Lord, save or I perish;" "God be merciful to me a sinner;" "Here, Lord, I give myself to thee, 'tis all that I can do;" "If I am damned it is just, but if I am saved it is mercy." At this point in the man's Christian experience belief and trust meet together, and "righteousness and peace kiss each other." The man is justified by faith, and has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. He is saved by grace through faith.

Hence it is very clear that the faith that saves a sinner from his sins in this life, and in that to come, is belief and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ on the part of the sinner, and divine power on the part of God, united with the sinner's belief and trust, that saves him from his sins. It takes both belief and trust on the part of the sinner to place him in a condition to claim and receive the divine power of faith which converts the soul to God. He may believe that Jesus died for his offenses and rose again for his justification, and live and die a sinner, and be eternally damned, because he has not trusted in the only-begotten Son of God for salvation from sin.

At this point in Christian experience thousands and tens of thousands are deceived, and we fear will lose their precious souls. They believe the Bible, they believe in Jesus Christ as the Savior, but they have not trusted in him, and him only, for salvation. This degree of faith they are ignorant of and are yet in their sins, and are traveling in the broad way to hell. They trust in themselves, in their own good works—their prayers, their tears, their good desires, their sweet songs, their punctual attendance on church ordinances, the preached word, the prayer meeting, the class meeting, the love-feast, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the Sunday school, their family devotions, their fasting, their self-denial and their charitable acts, but not in the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, so as to have a knowledge of pardoned sin and regenerating grace, without which knowledge no soul can be saved. Christ Jesus says: "Ye must be born again." "Ye must be born of the water and of the Spirit or ye cannot enter the kingdom of God." Without being made by faith a new creature in Christ Jesus all our own good works will profit us nothing—we must be lost. God's plan of saving sinners is by grace through faith and there is no other; and if we will not submit to be saved on his plan we must be lost.

As it regards the divine agency of faith united with the human agency of faith, it is a divine power we cannot explain. St. Paul himself does not explain to us how this divine power and human agency are united together in the act of faith. He only tells us what faith is, and speaks of its power in Hebrews xi. There he says: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." There is a divine agency in faith that human beings can enjoy, but cannot explain. The wisest man on earth cannot explain it when he is converted to God, and enjoys it, so as to enable the penitent sinner to understand and exercise and enjoy it. The sinner has to solve this problem himself, alone and single-handed. This the most ignorant sinner on earth may do; but the wisest man on earth cannot do it for him. He can know that the Son of Man has power on earth to forgive sins by feeling all his sins forgiven and the love of God shed abroad in his soul. Then he is a happy man; and no man on earth can be happy without this knowledge of sins forgiven—the knowledge of being saved from sin by grace through faith.

Reader, have you this knowledge? If so, you are a happy man; if not, you cannot be happy—you are always in doubt.

VISIONS OF THE NIGHT.

While reflecting upon the fall of man, me thought I fell asleep. I dreampt, and my dream ran thus: I stood on a wide, wide plain; around me and above me beamed light, but I could discern no sun. All upon a sudden gloom, as of the departing day, overspread the face of the landscape; weird forms sprang up around me, and strange sounds broke upon my ears. While trying to realize my situation, a spirit-shape arose before me. She was clad in a garment of somber hue, and her visage wore the marks of deep sadness, while her voice—for she spoke to me—was mild and subdued. "Look!" said she; "look behind thee!" Turning, I beheld, as it were, a narrow streak like a path, with numberless windings, stretching itself almost to an immeasurable length across the plain behind me. While I was pondering what this might signify, I saw arise at the utmost extremity of the path a tiny form, and soon after another and another, until the path was literally thronged. The somber form before me lifted up her hand, and beckoned to those forms to come near; and they came. In the footsteps I had trod they sprang up, as if conjured by a word of power; and as they arose in the gloom they hastened at once to obey the beck of that hand. Nearer and nearer they came, growing in size as they approached; for although they were not of equal size, yet the smallest, when viewed near by, was a towering giant. Their name was legion; their aspect one of fierce malignity. They were each armed with a spear whose point gleamed with light. On they came, as numerous as the stars of heaven, and marshaled their serried ranks before me and around me, until I was encompassed by them on all sides. My heart quaked; I had scarcely courage left to muster this formidable array; but when I did I recognized one and then another, until there was no longer any doubt in my mind that I knew them, one and all. But their aspect had changed. I had known them, it is true, but not as such horrid monsters as they stood before me now. I associated them with scenes of mirth, festivity and pleasure, and recalled the hours spent in their society as being hours of joy. But nothing of this kind was left. It was evident they had become my foes.

The powerful beckoner now opened her lips to speak. "Here you see them! I have brought them up from the grave of the past. Almost forgotten, yet they live—worms and decay cannot touch them—they are an immortal host. You thought they were short-lived; so they were, in one sense; but in another they are indestructible. You thought that night and oblivion had covered them forever; but see! their forms belong to the living present and the dread future. I leave you to their mercy." Having said this the form, whom also I had recognized as being one who had formerly befriended me often, vanished away.

The grim host before me lowered at me angrily; but although armed, they seemed to be unable to harm me as yet. Just when I was thinking about a way to extricate myself from this unpleasant, yea, fearful situation, there stalked toward me another form across the plain, from which the last ray of light had almost passed away—of a mien so stern and a tread so formidable that no strength was left in me when I looked upon it. In a voice that made my vitals freeze, it spoke to me the following words: 'Man, son of the dust, look up and behold my face! Ah, thou knowest me, and cause enough hast thou to quake before me. My servant—Memory her name—has at my command brought out against thee this army bristling with destruction. There was a time when thou didst bid me hold my tongue, for Conscience is my name, and we know each other well. But hear me now you shall, for the gloom of death is upon thee, and the God of mercy, whom thou hast slighted, has delivered thee up to thy just doom. And these shall hear me. They are under my command, and do my bidding. Thou knowest them too—they are thy sins, which now arise before thee, ready to become thy executioners. Once thou couldst have disarmed them and me, for a powerful ally offered thee his assistance; but now he has withdrawn from thee the arm of his power; the shield of his salvation no longer covers thy defenceless head. Here, on the wide plains of eternity, thou shalt fight, unaided, the battles to which this dark host shall continually press thee; and I, immortal as thou, will lead them untiringly on." Then, turning to the fearful spearsmen, Conscience said: "On him! set on him! Do your work!" At that moment they set up an unearthly yell, and began to hurl at me their sharp lances. The light with which they were tipped rendered the wounds they inflicted immediately healable. And thus they pierced with a thousand death-wounds, yet I could not die; but evermore the onset was renewed, while Conscience, grim and stern, would not let her fearful army rest. While struggling to ward off the numberless thrusts made at me by those horrid ranks I awoke!

After having collected my thoughts, and recalling the terrible vision that had flashed through the chambers of my imagination, O! how thankful I was that Jesus, the Lamb of God, had taken my sins away.

GENESIS AND GEOLOGY.

Ma. Editor: At the suggestion of Bro. Lancaster we offer a few thoughts upon the relation of geologic science to revealed religion. Bishop Watson compares a geologist to a gnat mounted on an elephant, and laying down theories as to the whole internal structure of the vast animal from the local phenomena of the hide. The comparison is unjust to the geologist as a scientist, but highly applicable to him as a cosmogonist. There are two theories in regard to the relation of geology to the Mosaic account of the creation.

1. That it, as a science, is antagonistic to it. This is not a dangerous hypothesis, as the argument drawn from a solitary science must be demolished by the overwhelming preponderance of the arguments drawn from a score of physical sciences, each reflecting one or more of the glorious attributes of Deity.

2. That it agrees with and substantiates the Bible.

The first point about this is that it is highly gratuitous. The Bible was substantiated long before geology became a science, and that by "a cloud of witnesses." This hypothesis is a species of the "tickle-me-Jerry" doctrine. To advance the first hypothesis would be a death-blow to the science. Suppose a man of twenty-five were to meet a man of eighty and say, "Sir, you are of royal parentage; I knew your ancestors in the time of Alfred the Great"—what would the octogenarian say? Just what the theologian would say to the geologist: "I have more accurate information, sir, than that." There are very great disagreements between the leading scientists; but the best-developed system seems to be about this: Previous to the creation of man there were four ages or times, as follows: 1. The Azoic; 2. The Palæozoic; 3. The Mesozoic; 4. The Cænozoic. Then comes the age of man. In the first age the rocks have no fossils, nor signs of organic life or substances. The rocks of the second age or time contain fossils of ancient and now extinct animals, of fishes and of lignites. The formations of the third age contain fossilized reptiles, and is often called the reptilian age, because in it the various classes of reptiles attained their highest expansion. The fourth age, or the mammalian age, is that in which the fossils of mammalian animals are found. These animals are distinguished in this particular from those of the second or Palæozoic age. Then comes the age or era of mind, or man's creation.

In regard to the manner of agreement there are two theories.

1. That there was a long period of time which elapsed between the creation spoken of in Genesis i, 1, 2 and the work of the six days. This is claimed in order to find time for the various formations. This interim is called by geologists "the beginning." They distinguish between the words "create" and "make."

2. That there was no interval of time, but that the six days corresponded to and were the eras or ages of which we have spoken.

The Azoic age and the first day agree in that there was no organized substance in existence. The Palæozoic age and the second day disagree in the fact that there was nothing organic on the globe (see Genesis,) while the geologist has a world of mammoth animals and mollusks, when there was neither dry land nor vegetation; which, according to the true theories of creation, comes before animate nature, but according to the progressive theories is placed after. The Mesozoic and the fourth day disagree in that the account of Moses contains nothing either zoologic or geologic, but its transactions are entirely of an astronomical nature.

An observer might ask: "Why compare the third age and the fourth day?" Because the third day corresponds to the Devonian age in the Palæozoic time. The Cænozoic time and the fifth day disagree in that geology ascribes the creation of mollusks and fishes to the second day. Besides, geology, while it anticipates the work of the sixth day by ascribing it to the fourth, is on the other hand entirely silent concerning the aerial creation. These are discrepancies which no art can evade, no skill reconcile. The witnesses cannot agree among themselves; so the Scriptures are in no danger, unless some fanatic raises the cry: "Crucify him." We need not fear until the science ceases its explosions of its own favorite theories. Man is not content with the antiquities of sixty centuries, but is ever seeking to lock arms with "the celestial Chinaman," and wander off into the visionary. Had Pliny's account of the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum never reached us, the excavations now making would lead some to believe they were built before there was a world. Reason (geology) can never understand creation. "By faith," says Paul, "we understand that the worlds were made" of nothing.

Yours, PRAIRIE.

Another Reminiscence of Itinerant Life.

Mr. Editor: A good sister (a widow) and a member of my charge (Cuba circuit, Alabama Conference) had been attending Baptist meetings, and heard much about the "clap-trap sentimentalism" of "John in Jordan," "going down into the liquid grave," "immersion the only mode, and all-essential" to baptism. Her mind became somewhat jostled about her early baptism. The writer referred her to passages of Scripture to prove her baptism valid, and according to the apostolic mode. A short time after this I held a protracted meeting at the church where she belongs. She was deeply concerned about her eldest son, a man of family, who had terribly backslidden. Her anxiety became so great about him that she scarcely ate anything during the meeting, and spent hours in agonizing prayer in his behalf. She emphatically "fasted and prayed." She also prayed the Lord to direct her about the "water-baptism." She seemed to lose sight of almost everything but the objects of her prayers.

On the afternoon of the last day of the meeting a young brother, who has since been licensed to preach, and myself were at her house. She again spoke of the objects of her great anxiety—her son and baptism. The young brother alluded to ventured to suggest to her to test the matter that night—which was that before she went to church that night to ask the Lord that, if her baptism was an error, not to bless her that night, but leave her heart cold and feelingless; but if her baptism was right, please grant her an overpowering blessing that would be convincing to her mind that she needed no more water; all of which she willingly assented to do.

The night meeting came on, and while the writer was in the altar, urging sinners to come to God, our prayer-heroine rose with a shout, praising God, and, running to the young brother, her face radiant with a glory-smile, caught him by the hand and exclaimed, "Glory to God! I have been rebaptized with the Holy Ghost, and I want no more water;" and, coming to the writer, repeated the same words. No one doubted her honesty in the matter, as she is regarded as a good and truthful woman. Her attention was directed still more anxiously to her prodigal son. There he sat, looking as feelingless as marble. She had been to him once begging him to come to the altar. He pushed her away. Her difficulty seemed to rise mountain-high. Like the Syrophenician woman, she urged her suit at a throne of mercy. The meeting closed; but her anxiety and prayers for her son did not cease with it. "Perhaps God's hand of conviction will be laid upon him before the pastor leaves the neighborhood." As I was standing near the pulpit, bidding loving brothers and sisters adieu, I turned my eyes toward a window near me. There the widow's son stood with a look indescribable. A thought struck me—I will speak one more word to him about his soul. I went to him and said: "James, the meeting has closed, and you have neglected the interest of your soul, and it may be your last opportunity." I gave him a word of admonition and left him. I believe that word "was as a nail in a sure place," and fastened "by the glorious Master."

The young brother and myself went that night to Bro. B. B. Portiss', a worthy member and steward of that church. It was about eleven o'clock when we retired to rest. Tired from frequent labors, I had fallen into a deep slumber. In about two hours I was awakened by loud raps at the door. Bro. Portiss spoke, and said that James was there and wanted to see us. I lighted a candle and opened the door. They came in. James wore a troubled look. He took a chair near the bed. He said his mother wanted us to come to her house. I remarked to him: "James, your mother has prayed for you." Tears began to flow from his eyes the first time prayer was made for him. When we arose from our knees I saw a change had taken place. He grasped our hands in gratitude to God. I opened the door of the church right then—he joined. He returned to his faithful mother (two miles) "clothed and in his right mind." Glory to God, for he heareth the faithful prayer! Truly, in this case, "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Yours in Christ, GEORGE BANCROFT.

Obituaries.

Brother William J. Mabin was born in Adams county, Mississippi, January 27, 1815. He came to Louisiana in mature life; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about thirteen years ago; and died at his home in Carroll parish, in the bosom of his precious family, October 27, 1872.

His disease, cancer, was many long months in accomplishing its agonizing work of death. At times his bodily sufferings were severe; but he seemed to bear it with Christian patience. During the latter part of his illness his religious experience was dark and uncertain; but some time before he entered "the valley of the shadow of death" the gloom seemed to disappear and a heavenly light to shine upon the road. And thus, at the close of day, he fell into a quiet sleep, that will not be broken till the bright morning of a blissful eternity shall dawn. Many relatives and friends will long revere his pleasant memory.

James E. Bradley, P. C.

Mrs. Susan Elizabeth, daughter of William and Elizabeth Browning, and consort of Dr. J. C. Nixon, died, at the residence of her husband, near Utica, Hinds county, Mississippi, on the twenty-second of November, 1872. She was born June 30, 1830, in Copiah county, Mississippi—only a few miles from the place where she breathed her last. Her home was in one of the above-named counties all her life.

The writer of this notice was familiarly acquainted with her from childhood, and can say of a truth that in her were blended many noble qualities. She was married to Dr. J. C. Nixon—who is the Son of the Rev. Thomas Nixon, deceased—on the Seventh of November, 1850. She shortly after joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she remained an acceptable member until her death. She was an affectionate wife, a kind mother and an obliging neighbor and friend. Her sickness was long and painful, but she bore her suffering with patience, and when the hour came for her to leave she passed off quietly, without a struggle.

She was the mother of fifteen children, nine of whom preceded her to the spirit land. Six still remain to mourn their loss with their father.

To her husband and children we would say: "Weep not as those who have no hope, but be faithful until death in serving that God whom your companion and mother adored, and you will meet her in that land that knows no sorrow, and where parting will be no more." W. W. Funchess.

Mary W. Carnathan was born in North Carolina, April 13, 1832, and died in Kemper county, Mississippi, on the eighteenth of October, 1872. The circumstances attending the death of Sister Carnathan were of a painful character. In company with her husband and little daughter she had gone the day previous to her death, to the house of a friend and neighbor to spend the day. Returning late in the evening in a spring wagon, the horses became unmanageable, and in running down a little hill Bro. Carnathan was thrown from the wagon, leaving his wife and child alone, and, without the reins. The horses were badly frightened in consequence of the cries of the wife and daughter, and, running with great speed a short distance, the wagon was upset, which threw sister Carnathan with great force against a tree, fracturing her skull and otherwise injuring her. She lived after this sad accident about thirty-six hours; but owing to the pressure on her brain she talked but little, being most of the time in a stupor. A short while before her death she inquired for her little daughter, who fortunately escaped with slight injuries, for which the dying mother seemed to be grateful. She then remarked to the weeping and grief-stricken husband, "I am going home," and almost without a groan or a struggle she calmly and peacefully passed away.

The writer has sustained the relation of pastor to the deceased for two years past, and from his personal knowledge of her amiable qualities and Christian virtues he feels assured that she has gone where sin and pain and death will never invade. By this sad dispensation of Divine Providence the community where she lived has lost one of its brightest ornaments, the church at Scooba one of its most faithful members, and the family of which she was a member its light and joy. Earth has grown poorer, but heaven is made richer by the transfer. May God sustain the bereaved and afflicted family.

D. G. W. Ellis, Pastor.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Bro. William K. Ustick departed this life, at his home in this place, at half-past three o'clock A. M. on the first of september instant. A good man has fallen in Israel. Bro. Ustick united with this church in 1856, and served as a steward of this Quarterly Conference about thirty-six years. He was actively engaged in every effort to promote the welfare and improve the piety of the church. He ever gave with unusual liberality of his means to support the church which he so devotedly loved. The ministry could ever rely upon him for assistance and advice, and his home was ever the preacher's home.

His devotion as husband and father was extraordinary. To his family he was gentle, affectionate and tender.

As a citizen he was public spirited and enterprising, and he was ever to be found on the side of order and morality. His example in public and private was worthy of imitation.

But it is chiefly as a Christian man that we delight to speak of him. He was so humble—esteeming others better than himself. He claimed no merit for anything he did. He delighted and abounded in good works. He seemed never to think he merited anything for any good which he did. He fought a good fight. "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Be it, therefore,

Resolved, by this Quarterly Conference, That in the death of Bro. Ustick this church has lost an humble, faithful Christian, the community an honorable and useful man, the poor a sympathizing friend, his family a devoted husband and father; and, while we deplore his loss, we feel that he has gone to reap the rewards of a well-spent life, and to be happy with the blessed forever.

Resolved, That we humbly submit to this painful dispensation of Divine Providence, and will remember that we too are passing away, and will watch and be sober, that we may be prepared to meet the summons when the messenger shall call for us.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of our deceased brother our heartfelt sympathy and prayers, and commend them to the throne of grace which supported and sustained our brother in his life and death for comfort and consolation.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be furnished to the family of our deceased brother, a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that the memorial and resolutions be spread in the minutes.

The foregoing memorial and resolutions, reported by the committee, were unanimously adopted at the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Livingston, Alabama, September 16, 1872.

J. Combs, Secretary.

Witty sayings are as easily lost as the pearls slipping off a broken string; but a word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even dropped by accident, springs up into a flower.

Adversity does not take from us our true friends; it only disperses those who pretend to be such.

Eloquence is reason set to music, and, like reason, should never be perverted to base purposes.

ROCK OF AGES.

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me!"
Thoughtlessly the maiden sung,
Fell the words unconsciously
From her girlish, gleeful tongue;
Sang as little children sing;
Sang as sing the birds in June;
Fell the words like bright leaves down
On the current of the tune—
"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

"Let me hide myself in thee,"
Felt her soul no need to hide;
Sweet the song as song could be—
And she had no thought beside;
All the words unheedingly
Fell from lips untouched by care,
Dreaming not that each might be
On some other lips—a prayer—
"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me"—
'Twas a woman sung them now,
Pleadingly and prayerfully;
Every word her heartfelt know.
Rose the song as storm-tossed bird
Beats with weary wing the air;
Every note with sorrow stirred—
Every syllable a prayer—
"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,"
Lips grown aged sung the hymn
Trustingly and tenderly—
Voice grown weak and eyes grown dim.
"Let me hide myself in thee,"
Trembling though the voice and low,
Ran the sweet strain peacefully,
Like a river in its flow.
Sung as only they can sing
Who life's stormy paths have pressed;
Sung as only they can sing
Who behold the promised rest—
"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,"
Sung above a coffin-lid;
Underneath, all restfully,
All life's joys and sorrows hid.
Nevermore, O storm-tossed soul!
Nevermore from wind or tide,
Nevermore from billow's roll
Wilt thou need thyself to hide.
Could the sightless, sunken eyes,
Closed beneath the soft gray hair,
Could the mute and stiffened lips
Move again in pleading prayer,
Still, ay, still the words would be:
"Let me hide myself in thee."

BISHOP McTYEIRE IN CALIFORNIA

OCTOBER 23.—Our route back from the southern end of the valley to Los Angeles City was chosen along the foot-hills, thus escaping sand, and getting new views. Flocks of sheep were passed, each attended by a shepherd, and numbering, as our companions, who were used to such things, computed, from one to three thousand. No green thing, except cactus, was on the plains; but their food was the dried grass and a clover-burr that abounds, and is so small as to escape the unpracticed eye. Our ship, the week following, on her way to San Francisco, took on, from this coast, two hundred and fifty bales of wool, weighing from two to three hundred pounds, and not unlike the Carolina cotton bales of thirty years ago, when screw-packing had not come to be uniformly adopted. This, with wine and lead from mines east of the coast-range, made up our return cargo. The lead has a considerable per cent. of silver, and there are works in San Francisco for separating these metals.

The wild mustard is a native growth, the patches covering from a quarter to several acres. It indicates a warm soil, and, free from the alkali that spots the land. A half ton of seed may be gathered from an acre; and it is a merchantable article at three or four cents per pound. The Chinese turn a penny at it. The white mustard of commerce is sometimes sown in the fields higher up in the State.

As our dinner-appointment could not be reached till four P. M., the party of seven got a lunch at the house of a well-to-do native. One dozen pomegranates for twenty-five cents—the rest in grapes and pears and figs, making the whole cost seventy-five cents. The oranges were not ripe yet, and the English walnut in the front yard was just cracking its hull, very like a hickory-nut. The family were engaged, in primitive style, shelling out the frijoles which form so large a part of their sustenance. The only showy thing about was a horse at the door, gaily caparisoned with silver-mounted bridle and saddle, and hair-rope gracefully dangling. A young man, with hidalgo air, rode off, before our admiring eyes.

A trifling incident comes to mind which reminds me to say that flies are numerous here and fleas are innumerous; against the former wire or gauze doors and windows can be constructed, but the latter are "chartered libertines." Sand-storms occur, of which one who has seen them gave me this account: "Occasionally the wind coming down through the mountain gorges meets a current from the sea, and then we have it. Tall mustard-stalks fly like arrows through the air, and the sand blinds you. Housekeepers shut their doors; but it creeps in through unknown crevices, and for a day or so afterward bed-quilts, tablecloths and things generally are gritty."

The grasshopper puts in his appearance at intervals—time and place uncertain. Certain localities claim never to have been visited. This scourge is short and severe; and, like the cotton planters who see their crops cut off by the cater pillar, the men afflicted by the grasshopper try it again, and hope for a better result next time. Bro. Ellis showed us five fruit trees—all that were left him two years ago of a planting of three hundred. One of the preachers told me this: He was holding meeting in a neighborhood that had lately been cleaned out. One of the congregation was a man "in liquor," and holding his head down. The preacher had occasion to quote, in the course of his sermon, from Ecclesiastes: "And the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail." The stupid hearer straightened up: "Mister, did you say the grasshoppers wan't coming any more?" It was almost too much for the gravity of the pulpit—the beseeching tone of the interruption, and its plain intimation: "If you did say that, you are the man for me."

Night brought us to El Monte, the home of Bro. Ellis, in the hospitalities of which we had occasion to remark, as often before, how well our Southern people can adapt themselves to the situation, and without Phillis or Bridget or "John" or Sambo, live comfortably and elegantly. Our friend's kindness did not stop here. Next day he favored us and others with his company. We visited the San Gabriel mission, which bears the marks of Frémont's cannon in its east gable. Close to the mountains is that gravelly soil so well suited to vineyards and orchards, but it produces nothing except small grain, without irrigation. Here are the larger plantations and more expensive. Mr. Wilson has over two hundred acres in vines, and his yield this year of wine and brandy is reckoned at two hundred thousand gallons. Mr. Rose has a more fancy place; much money and taste have been expended upon it. Here are a thousand orange trees, some of them bending with fruit. His walnuts and lemons are fruitful, but the olive will not yield much oil this season. The vintage was over and the last of the wine-pressing was done just before we came. Ten men (Mexicans or Indians—I cannot tell them apart) were sitting at the door of the warehouse-looking building, with pantaloons rolled up above their knees; the eleventh was playing a hose on his calves and ankles, washing off. Within I saw the places they had left. Twelve cisterns stood in a row. On each lay a vat six feet long by three wide, and fourteen inches deep, and as the juice was expressed it ran through small apertures into the vessel below. The stems and skins and seed and lees were distilled into brandy—the woe-making still-worm being near and at its baneful work. I had supposed this ancient method of treading out grapes done away. Nothing, it seems, is like the human foot for making pure vine. Machinery breaks the seed, and thus spoils the flavor that connoisseurs delight in.

It is proper to say that the moral results hoped for by the friends of temperance have not been realized. It was said that the same effect would follow vine-culture in America as in Europe, where the juice of the grape is a common beverage, and drunkenness is uncommon. Soil or climate or national temperament tends to a different result here. Our countrymen do not get disgusted at strong drink because a weaker is abundant and cheap; nor does access to it take off the edge of morbid appetite. A friend in the grain-growing region gave me his experience: "I and my neighbors were accustomed to turn the product of our little vineyards into wine, after using what we wanted for eating, and for drying into raisins. But I noticed that two or three of them caught red noses, and one became a confirmed drunkard. My wife and I took counsel on it, and agreed to make no more wine than what was needed for our vinegar."

We could not extend our trip to those other valleys that make up the territory of this youngest and smallest (in numbers) of the Conferences—the San Fernandino valley, the Santa Barbara, the San Bernardino, the San Louis Obispo and others.

Thursday evening found us in the city again, where we filled an appointment at the courthouse—both preaching. As this was the city "of the angels," Dr. S. told them he would, instead of exhorting, preach a short sermon on First Peter i, 12: "Which things the angels desire to look into." Our church have a lot here, and must this year have a house on it. If the right "transfer" can be found for this place (and I am in search of one) a strong society may soon be built up. I have nowhere seen a more open door; we must enter and occupy, not only for the sake of the place itself, but on account of its relations to other positions.

Our kind host, Bro. Long, with his wife, left nothing to be desired by us during our stay with them. He gave me a view of the city and its lovely suburbs. We rode by a field where four natives were gathering the crop, and emptying their baskets into a wagon standing in the head row. I entered with them, and assisted one in filling his basket, receiving gratias. There is a joint in the stem, near its junction with the vine, which, to a practiced hand, snaps off clean and easily. No stakes are used—the vines, from one and a half to four inches in diameter, are cut off three or five feet above the ground, and stand upright, supporting laterals and fruit. A thousand to the acre is the rule, and under good culture and seasons they yield from ten to twenty pounds each. Small farmers bring in their crops to the manufacturers, and are selling this year at the low figure of seventy-five cents per hundred pounds.

I said to my friend: "There is one thing I have failed to see—men in the act of treading the press." "You shall see it," he replied, and took me to the place. There it was, differing a trifle from the order and the neatness of Rose's establishment. The wine-press was large—could hold a wagon-load—and was so inclined that the fluid ran out at one corner into a trough. Six men were in it, and they looked weary, reminding one of horses treading clay for brick. It is downright hard work, and there is no law against perspiration. One of the six, a Dutchman, had on his old boots, and tramped tremendously. Another's pants had fallen about his ankles, and were sadly bedraggled. It was a squelching mess, in sight and sound. Desiring to see the virgin color when the clusters are freshly broken, I selected from a wagon; waiting to discharge its load, three bunches that would average two or two and a half pounds, and, piling them compactly in a vacant corner of the vat, requested a young German, with a proper big foot, to crush them. He hesitated, as if a trick against him were suspected; but on being assured by the man in boots, he advanced and put his foot on them. It would have made the gorge of a wine-bibber rise to see how the purple juice boiled up between his toes! They say that all that is bad works off in the process of fermentation. Let us hope so.

And now, if the reader is tired of this, I crave pardon, and have done with it. It was all new to me and interesting.

Do I advise anybody to move? I durst not. Some have been benefited by moving; others worsted. Go and see; but be prepared to stay, for it may take all you've got to get there. The poor will be always, and—they are everywhere. The local compensations of Providence are striking. Nevertheless, some places are better than others. Nashville Christian Advocate.

SURVEY OF MOUNT SINAI.

The Sinai Survey Expedition, under the auspices of the Palestine Exploration Fund, have just published the result of their labor. It consists of a folio volume of letter-press and plates, three volumes of photographs, and a portfolio of maps, plans and sections. This magnificent publication reveals the perfect and accurate history of the Sinaitic regions. It elucidates by the most unassuming though logical tests of theodolite and land-chain, of altitude and azimuth instruments, of the photographic camera, and the unerring evidence of the pole star and the sun, the true geography of the country, while the records of tradition are tested by the true native nomenclature at the hands of Mr. E. H. Palmer, Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic at Cambridge, a competent Oriental scholar. The united verdict of the members of the expedition ascribes to the Jebel Musa the precise locality of the Levitical Sinai. This spot perfectly fulfills the required topographical conditions, the chief of which are a commanding height, a plain or open space beneath it, well adapted for seeing and hearing, and capable of holding at least 2,000,000 spectators, and sufficient camping ground for them all in the immediate neighborhood. Here a bold granite cliff, 2,000 feet high, forming the north-western end of the mountain block of Jebel Musa, confronts a smooth gravel plain about 400 acres in extent, which slopes down to the foot of the cliff in such a manner that spectators assembled on it would have been in the best position for seeing and hearing the sights and sounds described in the narrative of the law-giving. The whole cliff front is called after its principal peak, the Ras Sufsafeh, and the plain is the plain of El Rahah. The Ras Sufsafeh stands apart from the neighboring ranges, and rises so suddenly and steeply from the plain as to answer exactly to the apostolic description of "the mount that might be touched;" while for the same reason it would have been easy to "set" or prescribe "bounds" at its foot beyond which no living thing might pass. Lofty granite ranges border the plain, and surround, though they do not meet the Ras Sufsafeh. The cliff, the plain and the adjacent heights thus form a great natural theater. The acoustic properties of this vast theater are very remarkable, the advantages offered by the physical formation being so heightened in effect by the desert stillness and the intense clearness of the air that sounds can be heard at astonishing distances. The mountain block of Jebel Musa rises, at its southeast end, into a solitary peak 422 feet high, which, as the dominant summit of the whole mass, bears the name of the Jebel Moneijah—"the Mount of Conference." This peak is the spot to which Moses ascended, in his forty days' absence from the camp, when he received the Law and the instructions for the Tabernacle; and hence the legendary interest which is attached to it. But the superior claims of the Ras Sufsafeh Er Rahah as a site for the proclamation of the Law to the congregated people are conclusively proved. The arguments from tradition and from topography are thus fully reconciled with one another. Seldom has science found a worthier subject for its triumphs, or brought a difficult inquiry to a more successful consummation.—English Churchman.

DEATH OF AGUAS IN MEXICO.

The death of Manual Aguas, at this critical moment in the history of Mexico, says the New York Observer, is one of those mysterious events which we cannot undertake to fathom or explain. Few missionaries could less easily be spared. His was a brief race, but a brilliant and blessed one. No one who saw him when, eighteen months ago, he entered the pulpit of the Mexican Protestant Church for the first time, in the full vigor of manhood, could have apprehended so speedy a termination of his course. But he accomplished much for the cause he had so deeply at heart; and if the eloquent voice which fascinated thousands in the cathedral, and afterward was raised with distinctness and success for Christ in the Church of San Francisco, is now mute in death, yet will its echoes long continue to exert a powerful influence upon the thousands who once listened with rapture to his thrilling appeals. The Rev. Dr. Riley, now in the United States, kindly furnishes the Christian World with the following particulars:

"Manual Aguas fell asleep in Jesus on the eighteenth of October, 1872, in the City of Mexico. The church in Mexico mourns beside his grave, but not as they who have no hope. The conversion of Manual Aguas was to the Church of Jesus in Mexico much what the conversion of Saul of old was to the early Christian church. The victories which, by God's blessing, he was enabled to gain in behalf of the pure gospel have very greatly opened up central Mexico for an extensive gospel work. Owing to the pressing and harassing needs of the church in Mexico, cruelly persecuted and hemmed in by surrounding Romanists, it became evident, at the beginning of this present year, that the writer would be compelled to leave his field of labor in that land to plead with Christians in the United States to aid the gospel cause in Mexico more effectively. Aguas was frequently preaching as often as twelve times a week. After the departure of the writer from Mexico Aguas attempted to assume the previous daily duties of his co-worker in Mexico in addition to his own. He nobly struggled on, but, crushed by the wear and tear and difficulties of the work, his health began to fail him. Still he worked on. The last time he preached in the chapel connected with the ex-church of San Francisco, the chapel where he so often had preached with such glorious, heaven-given power, he was so ill that friends had to assist him to descend from the pulpit. From that day his health rapidly failed him. His death was peaceful in the extreme. Without one struggle he breathed his last, just like a child going to sleep, and his soul flew to his Savior, whom he so much loved."

NOT A FEW humorous anecdotes are current respecting the use and abuse of the medicine chest on board British merchant vessels. One of them runs as follows: A sailor applied to his captain for relief, telling him that he "seemed to have something on his stomach." The captain referred to his book of directions, and promptly prescribed a dose of No. 15. Unfortunately, however, there had been a run of No. 15, and the bottle was empty. But the skipper was by no means at the end of his resources. There was plenty of No. 8 and plenty of No. 7. "Seven and eight make fifteen," said the captain; and Jack, to whom the calculation seemed quite natural, took the joint mixture with startling effect; for whatever was on his stomach came up with a rapidity that would have astonished the Royal College of Physicians.

A HELPING WORD to one in trouble is often like a switch on a railroad track—but one inch between wreck and smooth-rolling prosperity.

HONEST and courageous people have very little to say about either their courage or their honesty.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

AT A VISIT of the Rev. Bro. Lundberg to the congregation at Bethania, of the Mosquito mission of the Moravian Brethren, six men were baptized and ten women. The chief of the tribe was thereby so impressed that on the Sunday following, at the conclusion of the sermon, he rose from his seat and made a public declaration of his desire to become a Christian and to be baptized also. In general the Mosquito Indians seem willing to give up their superstitions, which consist entirely in the fear of death and dread of evil spirits, and to allow themselves to be led to Christ as their Savior. The chief hinderances are the love for intoxicating drinks and the pernicious influence of white traders, who go among them for the gum or caoutchouc which is found in great quantities in the forests of Mosquitia. The mission of these Brethren on the Mosquito coast has six stations, 14 missionaries, 192 church members, and 813 others in church connection.

THE mission newly inaugurated on the continental Island of New Guinea by the London Missionary Society is meeting with no opposition whatever, and with all the success that could be hoped for in so short a time. One of the Mare teachers, Josiah, writing from Dudu, says that fifty-five natives of that coast island have expressed wishes to embrace Christianity. Through an interpreter they uniformly say: "We wish very much to worship with you." They attend divine service regularly every morning and evening. Whenever the native missionary rings the bell—a wooden gong—they all flock to prayer. After repeated explanations of the gospel way of life and salvation, and the meaning of a profession of faith in the Christian religion, if they be asked, "Do you wish to do this?" they invariably reply: "Yes, we very much wish it." No one has yet answered "No." All who are engaged in the new enterprise are satisfied that God has heard and is abundantly answering their prayers on behalf of these people.

A REAL ADMISSION.—Prof. Virchow, of the University of Berlin, in a recent address before the German Association for the Advancement of Science, declared that it was the duty of Germans to resist the principles of the Pope's syllabus, and the action of the Vatican Council, as they attacked the foundations of modern society. The learned Abbe Molgno, editor of Les Mondes, in an indignant reply, virtually admits the truth of the charge, saying: "The church simply says that the pretended liberties upon which modern social order is based, viz.: liberty of thought, liberty of examination, liberty of conscience, the freedom of the press, right of holding public meetings, etc., lead inevitably to all the errors, all the disorders and all the revolutions imaginable; that they necessarily result in the overturning of society, the downfall of nations, and, what is more, the eternal perdition of souls. The syllabus and the council say nothing more than this." One would think that if they say this, there was no occasion for the indignant reply to Prof. Virchow's charge.

A HINDOO CONVERT, writing to an English friend, explains one of the discouragements to Christian profession among the natives of India as follows: "Very few Europeans, even in India, much less in Europe, have any idea of the difficulties which natives of respectable family connections and social position in this country have to surmount, and the great sacrifices which they have to make in embracing Christianity. They are looked down upon as outcasts, not only by their friends and acquaintances, but by their countrymen in general. Nor have they, as a general rule, any great sympathy from the Europeans themselves, whose religion they have embraced. In the last most pressing circumstance I have known many a convert to repine most bitterly in secret, and I think they are quite justified in doing so, for they have every right to expect a true Christian sympathy from their newly-made brothers in India and elsewhere; so they hang, as it were, between these two points, and you can easily conceive their miserable position, when just the reverse ought to have been the case. This state of things, of which few Christians in England are aware, amply accounts for the few conversions of which they hear among good and respectable native families, and which must be a mystery to many sincere Christians."

AS THE evangelical churches of Southern Germany and of Switzerland place high value on education as a means of missionary success, they provide thorough education and training for their laborers. The following are some of the requirements for entrance to the Missionary Institute at Basle, reported by Rev. Dr. Vail to the Christian Advocate: Each pupil must be at least seventeen and not more than twenty-five years of age, and well instructed in the common branches of learning. He must have sound health, so that he can endure a course of six years of study, and afterward the dangers of a tropical climate and the hardships of the missionary life. He must have a good knowledge of the Scriptures and good gifts of understanding and memory. He must lead a godly life and be truly born of the Holy Ghost. He must have not only a wish to become a preacher of the gospel to the heathen, but must, after reflection, prayer and self-examination, possess a firm conviction that he is called of God to the missionary work, together with the counsel of men who have been truly converted that such is his duty. This institution does not bind itself to send out the men it has educated in the six-years course; nor to continue them in its service, if sent out; nor even to support them. It has, by statute, no capital nor funds on which it can depend. It promises to be merely the almoner of what the churches contribute year by year. The pupils and missionaries of the Basle Institute, therefore, stand in a condition of constant trust: they go forward and labor in a spirit of pure faith continually.

THE proposal for a day of prayer, made by the Church Missionary Society, for an increase of laborers seems to have been prompted by a review of the fields unoccupied and of the latest forms of opposition to the Christian faith on heathen ground. Our Savior's commission to preach the gospel to all nations has been fulfilled in the greater part of Europe and North America. But how large the territories, how vast the populations still to which the gospel message has either not been proclaimed at all or to so small an extent as to be in no sense a fulfillment of the divine command! In a geographical point of view, since the revival of evangelical missionary effort, certain feeble races and scantily-peopled islands have been wholly brought within the domain of Christendom. The negroes of the West Indian Islands have in large numbers accepted Christian instruction. Madagascar, with its monarch, has outwardly adopted the Christian faith. The Sandwich Islanders and the New Zealanders have embraced the gospel. The isles of the South sea are almost wholly Christianized. In various parts of the heathen world Protestant churches have been established, which enroll several hundred thousand members, with many more attendants; and most of them are vigorous and progressive in their spiritual life. But the continental domains of India, China and Central Asia are still altogether unevangelized; and Christian missions have but touched the coast of the great continent of Africa. In a moral point of view, still greater obstacles remain to be overcome. Of the 700,000,000 human beings yet unevangelized by far the greater part belong to the three great antagonistic systems of religion—Mohammedanism, Hindooism and Buddhism. The first of these alone presents encouraging signs for greater efforts. In Turkey, the Levant and Persia a spirit of religious dissatisfaction is visible to an extent unknown before. Here and there individual inquirers are found who take into consideration the claims and teachings of the gospel, and, perhaps, secretly place more trust in Christ than in the Prophet. But in India Mohammedanism abates little if any of its bigotry, and among the African tribes it still continues its progress and conquests. A few years ago it was thought that Hindooism was tottering to its fall before the power of English education. Those who had enjoyed the light of Christian learning and science were expected to distrust their former faith, and in many cases to repudiate it altogether. But now it is found that university graduates publicly take part in its most degrading rites and ostentatiously enroll themselves as its champions. It holds its followers with a tenacity that seems undiminished, and visits those who forsake it for the Christian faith with most severe persecution. Even in the midst of Christian influences, in the heart of London, we have lately seen how many attendants at the Temple Bar are inflexible Brahmins and proud of their pagan principles. Buddhism claims 300,000,000 adherents, among whom the few Christian missions which have been established are apparently lost and of little effect. Its power seems to be waning in Japan; but in Ceylon, where this system has been most successfully assailed, it replies, by a vigorous self-defense, in sending out controversial tracts and in boldly endeavoring to sustain its atheistical philosophy by arguments. The Church Missionary Society has heretofore been known as the evangelical body, maintaining principles and advocating measures not shared in or sympathized with by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. But now we are thoroughly glad to see that the latter joins in this proposal, and thus makes recognition before the world of the efficacy of prayer, and of its dependence thereon for success in the world's conversion to Christ.—Independent.

GOD'S THOUGHTS.

The personality of God is essential to all proper and comforting conceptions of his character. Between this and atheism there is no middle ground. If will and intelligence are not at the fountain, creating, governing and upholding the universal frame, then there is nothing. The mental processes, the moral feelings, the thoughts of this infinite One can only be approached by looking within ourselves, as made in his image, and as, in some degree, reflecting and revealing the nature of him from whom we came. But the vast distance between the finite and the infinite must ever remain. Our little conceptions, our sense of moral objects, our knowledge and our thoughts are small and imperfect indeed compared with what is going on in the divine mind.

God's thoughts are exhibited in the material world, and science is a most devout and ennobling pursuit when it seeks to unfold the wisdom and designs of the Creator. God's thinking becomes clearer to us as astronomy goes out farther and farther into the expanse, demonstrating the vastness of the heavenly bodies, their inconceivable distances in space, and the elements of which they are composed. In the extension of our geological knowledge, in the advance of chemistry, in the researches of physiology and of botany we are constantly coming upon phenomena which tell us something more of the mind of the Creator. All was thought out before it was made. Before he spake, and before he commanded, the material universe was most perfectly planned. Stars, flowers, birds, man are the thoughts of God.

But the Bible is God's book, and it is a volume which puts in words what nature could never tell. Sin, redemption, heaven, guilt, unbelief, eternal death, are all exhibited as God regards them. While he hates sin, and punishes it, his revealed thinking is manifested to us through an atmosphere of love. Diverse from our conceptions, and higher, are his with reference to the spiritual and the immortal: "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Redemption is inconceivably sublime as a plan, as the exhibition of wisdom; but its chief grandeur lies in the love which prompted it, and which glows in all the details of its execution. "God so loved the world." This surpasses our apprehension, because it comes up from the depths of the heart of God. It seems like condescension that he should turn all this wealth of mind and heart upon man, and perhaps it is condescension beyond what angels can well comprehend; but we suspect the mercy, the tenderness, the love are the more wonderful as manifested to beings really exalted but terribly depraved and guilty.

The inspired writers felt the force of this condescension even more than infidelity, although they drew from it very different conclusions from those which skepticism has pretended to reach. Job was astonished and humbled under a sense of this tremendous stoop of love. "What is man that thou shouldest magnify him? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him?" David was filled with like emotions of wonder and comfort when he exclaims: "What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him?" God's thoughts are to us—he is mindful of us; he even visits us. Let us bring the subject still nearer, even to ourselves as individuals. David so brought home to himself the divine regard. Man as man, as a race, as the world running through all the generations and centuries, was a small thing to be magnified by the divine regard, when we take into account the heavenly orders which tower in myriad flames around the throne, and the possible worlds of intelligence which move throughout the stellar circuits. But it remains for faith to bring all the infinite glory and love and care to the tabernacle of a single heart. "But I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me." Hagar woke up to the apprehension, as startling as it was consolatory, in her grief and destitution: "Thou, God, seest me." But David, bowed under the sense of a greater destitution—weak, guilty, and surrounded by enemies—turned to God for comfort and support. "Yet the Lord thinketh upon me." Poor, insignificant, sinful, an atom in the vast cosmos, less than a grain on the ocean's strand, a drop, less than a dew-drop on the robe of nature; but God's thoughts were upon him. In spite of his afflictions, the rough handlings of the world, the tempests of affliction which beat upon him, he was still conscious that loving thoughts from the throne above were streaming forth upon him.

It is not strange that, with such a conception of God, he should characterize God's thoughts "as very deep," and declare: "How precious are thy thoughts to me, O God!" Graciously does God think of all of us; most graciously and tenderly when we are tempted to doubt his presence and care. But when we move forward into the light of Christ and his personal advocacy, we have a still more assuring view of divine thoughts, which are to us-ward. God's thoughts, as they dart upon us, are holy thoughts, and our hearts are sinful. But those divine thoughts come to us through him who died for sinners, and "ever liveth to make intercession for us." The ray loses none of its brightness, but it can no longer blast and destroy. Through Christ and in Christ are God's thoughts speeding their flight to every soul—to the careless and guilty that he may be saved from death, and to the buffeted and tempted saint that he may be of good cheer, and feel the warm and helpful sympathy which glows in heavenly places for him. Our own thinking is most pure, noble and cheerful when directed to the thoughts of God.

THE MINISTRY OF TEMPTATION.

The Scriptures abundantly teach us that the ministry of temptation is a good one. To be tried, even as in a crucible, is to be blessed. This, to the unspiritual, is an unseemly paradox. Nevertheless it is a great fundamental truth. "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." Not that temptation is to be considered an intrinsic good. Its existence implies the existence of evil. It likewise implies the existence of undeveloped good in man. Whether virtue would find its full strength and enjoy its full reward without temptation is questionable. More than this, we may say that it would not. Man, being in a condition of trial, the ministry of temptation is a necessity to that condition. As in his physical organism exercise is necessary to the full development of man's muscular forces, so by trial, by test, by the earnest ministry of temptation, his moral powers—the muscles of the soul—are brought out, and into active, energetic action. Hence a real intrinsic evil becomes a ministry of joy and blessedness. The question arises: When is this so? When and how can an essential evil become a positive good?

In the first place, one of the principal conditions is implied in the word "fall," in the passage above quoted: "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations."

Again, the same conditions are impressively taught us by our Savior in his great controversy with Satan: "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." The thought is that we are not to seek temptation, but rather pray: "Lead us not into temptation." "My thoughts are not as your thoughts, and my ways are not as your ways." Human philosophy would say: "If to fall into temptation was to be counted a joy, why not fall as often as possible?—the oftener the better." But not so. That which is a good in one condition becomes a curse in another. To go in the way of temptation—to seek it, directly or indirectly—is to add the sin of presumption to the most consummate folly. It is a condition virtually destroying the virtue of resistance. To court temptation and then look for deliverance is to rashly tempt the Almighty, and add sin to sin.

And yet another condition implied, supplementing this non-seeking and earnest shunning, is that of successful resisting. "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this: that the trying of your faith worketh patience." No good can be said to come of a temptation yielded to. The faith is not tried, but overcome. Faith overcome does not work or perfect patience. Concession militates against future resistance. Confidence is weakened, and the enemy gains a double victory—gains the present contest and is armed for a second attack.

We are to fight the good fight of faith. Resist the Devil and he will flee from us. The example and work of Jesus would have been unfinished had he yielded one jot in his contest with Satan. He resisted. Hence it is written: "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." "Though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory." Thus temptation, coming unsought to the way of duty—coming to an earnest heart-desire to do well, and resisted to the point of subjection—is a ministry of joy and gladness and strength. ***

STATE AFFAIRS.

We believe all candid persons are of one mind about our late State election—that it was the fairest expression of the people had for many years, and that the candidates returned by the proper authorities as elected are for integrity and capacity far ahead of any who have held office for the four years past. This result, however, is to be upset by intervention of a United States court, under a recent amendment of the Constitution and the enforcement laws, and by the presence of national troops. The details of events taking place within the past week and now going on are too voluminous for our columns. A body purporting to be the Legislature of Louisiana occupies the State House, guarded by Federal soldiers, and have summarily impeached Governor Warmoth. Pending the trial, Lieutenant Governor Pinchback has assumed the position and duties of Governor, and Warmoth is declared suspended from office. The conservative members of the Legislature recently elected, with some of the Senators holding over, are in the meanwhile withdrawn from the capitol, and are meeting in caucus, or possibly as a rival Legislature. What the upshot of all this muddle will be it is hard to say. There is much irritation and excitement in the public mind, and our substantial citizens are moving to make a strong appeal to the authorities at Washington. As a subjugated province we shall doubtless be turned over to negro-carpet-bag rule, and the exploded notions "of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" will be left to the declamation of Northern school boys and Radical politicians.

THE WAY TO WORK.

"Bro. Pauly reported seventy-two subscribers for the Familienfreund, and he has but seventy-two members."

We find the above in Bro. Verdenhausmen's report of the Houston German mission, which appears in "Our Outlook" this week. If the report had furnished no other information we could have formed a very accurate estimate of the religious condition of that church, and of the report the preacher will make at the coming Conference respecting other interests in his charge. Everybody can see from this one item that they are a live church; have a live preacher; that they are interested in the prosperity of the church; want to know all about its plans and movements, and hence they take their church paper. With this one fact as our only data, we would be certain that the members of that church paid their preacher's claim, and paid it cheerfully. When the missionary collection was taken up we are confident they responded. Their paper, with its weekly news from the church at home and abroad, keeps them in vital sympathy with the rest of the church, and they would gladly answer the call to join in the grand effort to send the gospel to the regions beyond. We would expect that the Bishop's fund and the Conference collection and other calls would meet like response. The members feel identified with the entire church, and join hands cheerfully with their brethren in supporting its varied interests. We would be equally certain that the Sunday school was well sustained, has a good supply of teachers, a well-filled library, and that there is life and soul in their singing. We have no question but the prayer meetings have been well attended; that the members promptly take part in the exercises; nor would it very greatly surprise us to learn that class meetings are still held among our German brethren in Houston, and that the souls of the members are often made happy in the love of God "while speaking one to another."

When we have a college in these lands in which preachers are made we want Bro. Pauly as one of the professors to train the young men for their important work.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

NOTICE FROM BISHOP MILES.

Attention is called to the following announcement of Bishop Miles:

MERIDIAN, MISS., Dec. 6, 1872.

The second session of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America (colored) will be held in Minden, Louisiana, commencing on the fifteenth of January, 1873.

WM. H. MILES, Bishop.

DR. WARREN STONE, the eminent physician and surgeon, died, at his home in this city, on Friday, December 6. Dr. Stone was sixty-five years of age. He came to New Orleans in 1832, and for forty years has stood at the head of his profession.

WE NOTICE that the college at Auburn, Alabama, has conferred the degree of D. D. upon Rev. W. A. McCarty, of the Alabama Conference. This is a well-merited recognition of Bro. McCarty's learning and worth as a preacher of the gospel of Christ.

Memphis Conference and the Publishing House.

We received a letter from Bishop Wightman, dated November 27, written from Memphis, in which he says: "Dr. Green attended faithfully to the interests of the Publishing House, and I made a rally. We got pledged $1,119, to be paid by March 1. I never saw contributions made with greater enthusiasm to any cause." He adds: "Little Rock is good for at least $500." We thank Bishop Wightman and the Memphis Conference.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

A LETTER from Bishop McTyeire, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, informs us that $270 was subscribed at North Georgia Conference to aid in fitting up Dr. Haygood's office, and that an equal sum will be contributed by South Georgia to complete it. We sincerely thank the Conference and Bishop Marvin, and Bishops McTyeire and Pierce, who were present.

AMONG the twenty preachers received into the Tennessee Conference, at its late session, is Rev. S. M. Merrill, formerly pastor of the High Street Congregational church, Columbus, Ohio.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We condense from the report of the Western Methodist:

The third session of the North Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South convened at the Presbyterian church, in the city of Corinth, on Wednesday morning, November 27, 1872, Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh in the chair, and was opened with religious services led by the Bishop.

James Wilkinson, Jas. W. Gooch, Francis Howarth, Thomas J. Taylor, Robert M. Davis, William S. Lagrone, John Mitchell, William V. Taylor, Robert Burnip, Joseph S. Oakley, David Plews, W. Ira Smith, Quincy A. Oates, Henry C. Parrott, Zacharia V. Tate, Ralph Bradley, Thomas Cotton, James M. Owen, James D. Whitshead, Reuben A. Ellis, Benjamin W. Aston, James M. Mitchell, were admitted on trial.

Richard Pratt, an ordained minister of the East British Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and W. J. Bullivant, an ordained minister of the Independent Church of England, having taken upon them our ordination vows, and having declared their belief of our doctrine, and their willingness to conform to our Discipline, were admitted into the Conference in elder's orders.

The following resolution, by J. J. Wheat and J. B. Cottrell, was adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That we have heard with pleasure from Dr. Andrews, president of the Southern University, of the excellency and prosperity of the institution, and that we recommend it to the patronage of our people.

The following resolutions, offered by E. E. Hamilton and P. Tuggle, were adopted:

Resolved, That we express unfeigned delight at the visit of Dr. E. E. Wiley and Rev. C. G. Andrews to our Conference.

Resolved, That we have heard with pleasure the cheering account they have given of Emory and Henry College and of Centenary College, over which they preside with universal acceptability.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the continued prosperity of these institutions, and heartily recommend them to the patronage of our people.

The names of the following persons were given by the Bishop as ordained by him on Sunday morning and afternoon:

Deacons—Alexius W. Langley, Samuel C. Stone, E. H. Moon, Henry E. Smith, Benjamin F. Morris, A. J. Foster, L. D. Worsham, traveling preachers; James Wilkinson, Daniel W. Bubb, Francis Howarth, David Plews, John Caffey, Ralph Bradley, Thomas Cotton, Robert Burnip, Henry T. Horn, Sampson H. Williams; local.

Elders—Ben. H. Bounds, Hiram R. Caldwell, Joshua K. Morris, Henry C. Morehead, Tilmon Page, traveling preachers; Wilbur F. Davis, local.

The report of the statistical secretary was presented and read in the aggregate by districts, and then adopted. This report presents the following aggregates, viz.:

White members, 25,085; colored, 5; local preachers, 213; adults baptized, 2,140; infants baptized, 876; Sunday schools, 237; superintendents and teachers, 1,254; scholars, 9,432; volumes in libraries, 15,637; Visitors taken, 2,019; money expended, $3,045; number of churches, 376; value of churches, $434,550; number of sittings, 96,792; number of parsonages, 10; value of parsonages, $17,000; value of other church property, $17,532; books sold, $2,341; periodicals taken, 2,918; salaries paid presiding elders, $9,205; salaries paid preachers in charge, $47,188; salaries paid junior preachers, $690.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance was presented, read and adopted. Estimates for superannuates and widows and orphans, $2,600; collected, $2,611.80. Apportionment for Bishops' fund, $1,150; collected, $1,157.

The report of the Conference Board of Missions was presented, and, having been read, was adopted. Collections for missions during the year, $2,828.10.

T. R. Luter, from Memphis Conference, T. S. Campbell, from Virginia Conference, W. M. Ross, J. P. Commander, G. W. Boyls, Mississippi Conference, were received as transfers.

The Bishop, by request of Dr. Redford, presented the question of taking a collection to aid in finishing the new Publishing House, and after an address by Dr. Green the sum of $700 was raised in cash and subscriptions, which amount, it is understood, will be appropriated to the fitting up of the room to be occupied by the agent of the Publishing House.

A resolution was, on motion of Dr. Garland, passed by the Conference, requiring each pastor to endeavor during the present Conference year to increase the $700 already raised for the Publishing House to $1,000.

The Revs. Philip Tuggle and T. Y. Ramsey, Dr. L. C. Garland and Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, were nominated to the Board of Trust of the Central University, for election as trustees to represent the North Mississippi Conference.

On motion, the Rev. Dr. Green, treasurer, and the Rev. W. M. Patterson, of the Memphis Conference, agent for the Central University, were invited to visit the charges of the North Mississippi Conference, and co-operate with its agent in obtaining funds for an endowment.

The following resolution, offered by T. C. Wier and R. G. Porter, was adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That we most cordially invite the Rev. Dr. A. S. Andrews to attend all the sessions of the North Mississippi Conference, and that we will welcome him in all our charges.

HORACE GREELEY'S will is in his own handwriting. It was written in the early part of November, and the formalities of acknowledgment and execution took place on the last day of his life, during a lucid interval, in the presence of half a dozen persons, and the subscribing witnesses to the will were Judge Hart's son, Reginald S. Hart, and Mrs. Lamson, the latter an old and esteemed friend of the family. All of his property is left to his two daughters, Miss Ida Lilian Greeley, aged about twenty-one years, and Miss Gabriella Miriam Greeley, about fifteen years old.

PACIFIC METHODIST COLLEGE, says the Pacific Methodist of November 21, reports one hundred and seventy-two students this week. We chronicle this progress with great pleasure. Dr. Fitzgerald informs us that he will pay Sonoma county a professional visit shortly, when we hope to record other success. Reference to the advertisement of the college will give our readers information of changes and additions to the faculty.

BISHOP MILES has organized an Annual Conference, named the Missouri and Kansas Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The session was held near Santa Fe, in Andrain county, September 26–29. Its first statistics report 11 traveling preachers, 13 local preachers, 670 members, 5 Sunday schools, 16 teachers and 153 scholars. Two deacons and two elders were ordained.

WE SHOULD judge men by their treatment of others, rather than by their treatment of us.—W. T. Clarke.

PERIODICALS.

WE HAVE RECEIVED Merry's Museum for September and November—both excellent numbers, and beautiful in illustrations and style. It has been united to the Youth's Companion, Boston, and will hereafter be discontinued as a separate publication. Merry's Museum, under its old and well-known name, is no more.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for December continues the Strange Adventures of a Phaeton, and has Searching for the Quinine Plant; Oriental Sports; Nurse and Patient; Private Art Collections of Philadelphia, besides other articles.

THE DECEMBER GALAXY has: French Scenes, Customs and Characters; Life on the Plains; The Growth of Giant Pope; Historic Lovers; Some Great English Lawyers; The History of Emancipation, and other matters.

THE November number of the Sunday Magazine has: Crooked Places; In Reformation Times; The Law of Growth in Nature—The Christian Walk; The Future of the Working Classes, and other articles.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD AND FACTORY for November has been received. It is a valuable periodical. Published monthly at Jackson, Mississippi, by E. G. Wall & Co., at $2 per annum.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY for November contains the usual amount of valuable matter. Its articles are always superior, and it is one of the very best periodicals of the day.

GOOD WORDS for November contains thirteen articles, and every one of them excellent, with the possible exception of the serial story by Mrs. Oliphant.

THE New York Journal of Commerce says that not less than $1,000 a day suffices to conduct a first-class daily newspaper with a full staff of editors and reporters, with its commercial and news correspondence, and its telegrams from every corner of the land, and its costly dispatches from across the ocean.

MOST MEN do not believe in the next world as they do in London or Boston; they do not launch upon the unknown sea with a shadow of that prophetic belief which girded up the heart of Columbus.—J. R. Lowell.

A WHITE GARMENT appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than grave offenses in bad men.—Dr. McCosh.

THE BLOSSOM cannot tell what becomes of its odor, and no man can tell what becomes of his influence and example, that roll away from him and go beyond his ken on their mission.

THOMAS CARLYLE, now nearly eighty years of age, has entirely abandoned writing, but appears occasionally in society, and talks as interestingly and vigorously as ever.

CAUTION.—Remittances should always be accompanied with instructions how to apply them. A brother sends money to Robert J. Harp, agent. It is placed to his credit on book account. The ADVOCATE book-keeper never saw it except in the list of acknowledgments, and sends him the customary monthly statement, showing a balance against him. He writes, sarcastically perhaps: "Remitted at such and such dates." We refer to files of letters and find it even so, but that he had accounts with Book Concern and also with ADVOCATE, and did not say on which one of them it should be credited. The amount due on one side of the house stood to his credit; on the other the discrepancy resulted from his neglecting to say "for Advocate." By giving us specific instructions our correspondents will save us much trouble.

EXTENT OF CIRCULATION.—The New Orleans Daily Times claims that its circulation is "OVER DOUBLE that of any other journal in the South." If the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be regarded as one of the "journals in the South," the Times is misinformed. Our opportunities for obtaining accurate information are equal to those of the publishers of the Times. Their circulation cannot be more than their issue. Their regular issue falls to between two and three thousand below the circulation of the ADVOCATE, according to our information.

PROVISIONS.—The new Western produce and grocery firm of Finney, Sheehan & Russ, at 85 Poydras street, have now for sale a large and choice stock of breakfast bacon, lard, spare, ribs, back bones, Western and Goshen butter, sugar-cured hams, bacon shoulders, bacon sides, and dry salted shoulders and sides. We recommend this house to our friends.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERY.—Mr. James Wilson has, at the corner of Jackson and Ronsseau streets, a large and well-stocked grocery, where he does not only a retail but a whole sale business. He promises to attend to all orders promptly, and delivers goods free of charge. Attention is solicited to his advertisement in another column.

GROCERIES.—Messrs. Caldwell & Griswold, corner of Magazine and Jackson streets, advertise elsewhere their extensive assortment of family groceries. It has been our privilege to know the senior member of this firm for a number of years, and we take pleasure in commending him and the firm to the favorable attention of our readers.

SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY. Messrs. J. H. Miller & Co., No. 48 Carondelet street, general agents and managers of the above company, have organized a local branch here. We call attention to their advertisement. The executive committee includes some of our best citizens.

ARCHITECT.—To those who need the services of an architect to draft plans for private or public buildings, or to prepare specifications as the basis of contracts with builders, we commend the advertisement of S. B. Haggart, which appears in this issue.

COTTON TIES.—We take pleasure in calling the attention of planters and merchants to the advertisement of Messrs. Bartlett & Rayne, general agents for the most approved and popular cotton ties.

REMEMBER, we only ask you to call and examine. Polite attention given to all. When you do want to purchase you will say the house is Navra & Offner's, 174 Canal.

FAMILY GROCERIES.—We direct attention to the advertisement of Ernest Scharpe, dealer in family groceries, corner of Saint Charles and Terpsichore streets.

WE REFER amateurs and dealers to the advertisement of F. Falk, No. 35 Camp street, wholesale and retail dealer, for choice brands of cigars and tobacco.

STYLISH HATTER.—The card of Henry Brisbi, No. 3 Carondelet street, appears in this issue. Those in want of hats, caps, etc., will do well to call on Brisbi.

FURNITURE.—D. Kelham & Co., No. 36 Royal street, desiring to make a change in business, advertise their large stock of furniture at cost price.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Dalheur College, 201 and 203 Canal street. de12 3in

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills as a Purgative medicine stand unrivaled. Their action is uniform, certain and safe. They are entirely vegetable, and do not cause those griping pains that most pills do.

AUGUSTA, November 9, 1869.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: I have long been a sufferer from torpor of the liver and dyspepsia, and in search of relief I have tried almost every medicine recommended for those diseases, but have never derived half the benefit from any of them that I have from your Vegetable Liver Pills. They are invaluable, and I would recommend to all with dyspepsia, sick headache and biliousness.

Yours truly, W. J. BLAIR,

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by PRICE'S CELEBRATED AROMATIC STOMACH BITTERS is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the nuclents preserved their archives in appropriate depositories, but the cases actually relieved by PRICE'S BITTERS will live

"Within the hook and volume of the brain,
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such, indeed, is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters—no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh, prolific fields that heaven sows for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it fills with the genial grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

THE STRAYING LAMB.

(READ JOHN X.)

A little lamb went straying
Among the hills one day,
Leaving its faithful shepherd
Because it loved to stray;
And while the sun shone brightly
It knew no thought of fear,
For flowers around were blooming,
And balmy was the air.

But night came over quickly,
The hollow breezes blew,
The sun soon ceased its shining—
All dark and dismal grew;
The little lamb stood bleating,
As well indeed it might!
So far from home and shepherd,
And on so dark a night.

But, ah! the faithful shepherd
Soon missed the little thing,
And onward went to seek it,
And home again to bring.
He sought on hill, in valley,
And called it by its name—
He sought, nor ceased his seeking
Until he found his lamb.

Then to his gentle bosom
The little lamb he pressed,
And as he bore it homeward
He fondly it caressed.
The little lamb was happy
To find itself secure,
The shepherd, too, was joyful
Because his lamb he bore.

And now, dear little children,
There's a shepherd up on high,
Who came to seek the straying,
Who all deserved to die—
For sin each lamb had ruined:
And far from God had led:
But, oh, what love unbounded,
He suffered in their stead!

And won't you love that Shepherd,
So gentle and so good!
Who, that you might be happy,
Let sinners shed His blood;
And who now sits in heaven,
Inviting all to come
And take his free salvation,
And share his glorious home.

Seeing the Point.

A boy returned from school one day with a report that his scholarship had fallen below the usual average. "Well," said his father, "you've fallen behind this month, have you?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did that happen?"

"Don't know, sir."

The father knew, if the son did not. He had observed a number of cheap novels scattered about the house, but had not thought it worth while to say anything until a fitting opportunity should offer itself. A basket of apples stood upon the floor, and he said:

"Empty out those apples, and take the basket and bring it to me half full of chips."

Suspecting nothing, the son obeyed.

"And now," he continued, "put those apples back into the basket."

When half the apples were replaced the son said:

"Father, they roll off. I can't put in any more."

"Put them in, I tell you."

"But, father, I can't put them in."

"Put them in! No! of course you can't put them in. Do you expect to fill a basket half full of chips and then fill it with apples? You said you didn't know why you fell behind at school; and I will tell you. Your mind is like that basket: it will not hold more than so much. And here you've been the past month filling it up with CHIP DIRT—cheap novels."

The boy turned on his heel, whistled and said: "Whew! I see the point."

Not a cheap novel has been seen in the house from that day to this.

Other and older persons might well see the same point. A mind filled with fiction hates and rejects truth. A person reading history, art, science or travels may grow wiser every day; but a man might read fiction for a hundred years, and know no more when he finished than when he began.

There is real sin and sorrow and suffering enough in the world for us to pity and relieve, without wasting our tears over the troubles of some imaginary "Matilda Jane;" and there is work and entetprise and adventure enough in real life to engage our powers without resorting to cheap novels for excitement. But unfortunately the girls who will shed many tears over some heroine's fictitious sorrows are the very persons who would turn up their noses at a suffering beggar, and leave sick persons to starve unvisited in a garret. And the boys who wax heroic over the great doings of some count or cut-throat are too lazy to earn an honest living, and are willing to have their mothers wait upon them and black their boots while they lie in bed, and then to swagger about the streets, smoking and swearing, in order to prove that they are men.

Don't fill your apple-basket with chip dirt.

Butter-Week.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

You never heard of such a thing? That's very probable. And no doubt it's "butter-week" all the year round with some of you youngsters. But if you were a young Russian, instead of a young American, you wouldn't need to have me tell you a word about it, and you'd think it the jolliest time in the whole year.

The reason that particular week has such an odd name is because of a curious custom of the people of crowding into that unfortunate seven days all the butter they would naturally eat in seven weeks. It is the last week before the seven weeks' fast which their religion imposes, and which ends at Easter.

Everything they eat is stewed or fried in butter, and I should think they'd be glad of a long rest after that.

They not only secure seven weeks' food in advance, but they try to lay up seven weeks' fun. One of the most popular amusements is coasting—"sliding down hill" we old folks used to call it.

The ice-hills are splendid—you would say—and built anywhere they are wanted. The rich have them in their own grounds, and the poor have them on public ground. Everybody in Russia, from the grandfather down to the baby, delights in the sport, and there are plenty of hills, I can assure you.

They are not built, as we build hills in our city parks, by hauling dirt in wagons till the pile is high enough. The first thing to do is to dig two holes, and the next to plant two high posts in them. It is no trouble to make them steady, for a pail or two of water poured into the hole, around the post, will freeze solid, and hold it perfectly.

To the top of these posts, on one side, is made a flight of stairs, and from that point to the ground, on the other side, is built a long slope, wide enough for three or four sledges, and made of lumber. That doesn't seem like much of an ice-hill, does it? But after the whole slope is covered with cakes of ice, nicely fitted together, and water poured over until the whole is frozen to a perfect glare, it begins to look like sport.

And when another is built by its side, sloping the other way, so that you can slide down one, go up the stairs of the other, which begin at that spot, slide down the other, and be just where you started, you must admit there's a chance for a very nice time indeed.

The Russians make great preparations for the ice-hill sport. They have elegant sledges, some cut out of ice, which in that country freezes four or five feet thick, and is very beautiful. Others have elaborately-embroidered cushions, and are large enough to hold two, for they take their sisters (and other folks' sisters) and have very gay times.

In the evening the evergreen trees at the sides are hung with colored lamps, and refreshment-rooms are provided, where tired coasters can rest and play games, such as "Hunt the Slipper." They really do play that just as we do, only they give it some dreadful, unpronounceable name.

With the poorer classes all the ice-hill fun is crowded into Butter-Week, and then comes the long fast, when they eat no meat or butter, and go to church every day.

They have some droll customs at Easter. For one thing, every one presents every one else with an egg. It isn't necessary it should be a genuine hen's egg—though that is generally expected; it may be of crystal or gold and stuffed with bon-bons or anything pretty and nice for a present.

But funniest of all is the kissing. Everybody kisses everybody else. Families kiss each other; merchants kiss all their clerks; generals their officers, and captains every private soldier in their company. Even the Czar doesn't escape. He kisses his family and servants, and then goes on parade, where he kisses his officers and a few private soldiers selected to represent the army.

I would be rather a formidable task to kiss the whole Russian army!

Nothing in Russia looks odder to Americans—who keep these things for private life—than to see a whole city burst out into kisses in such a droll way.

Respect Everybody.

This story of Benjamin Franklin was told me by a gentleman of Boston who remembered the old house in which Franklin was born. "Often," said he, "have I looked at the old tumble-down building in Milk street, and imagined the barefoot boy sitting on the door-step learning to spell from an old post-bill."

A young miss, daughter of a distinguished citizen, passed him one day while thus engaged, and the boy overheard her words of ridicule as she spoke to her companion, laughing at the eagerness of the poor lad, and deriding his "beautiful spelling-book."

But there came another day, when Franklin was our embassador at the court of France. A wealthy American lady, who was present at one of the festive occasions made in honor of Franklin, desired an introduction to her distinguished countryman. It was obtained, and great was her surprise to hear him say: "Ay, ay, we have met before." She could not remember when, and Franklin added: "You do not remember the barefoot little boy in Milk street studying his lesson from the muddy post-bill!"

The fair lady was much disconcerted at the remembrance of the incident. She knew not the name of the barefoot boy, but he knew her to be the daughter of rich Mr. ——, and, on being introduced, this incident of his childhood immediately recurred to his mind.

Housekeepers' Department.

ORANGE PIE.—Take the pulp and juice of two oranges, with a little of the grated peel, three eggs, one cup of milk and one of sugar. Stir the sugar with the yolks, and add to the orange juice; next add the milk, and then whites of eggs.

CINNAMON ROLLS.—Take some of the dough you make bread of. Work in shortening and sugar. Then make a paste of butter, sugar and cinnamon. Roll your dough out thin, spread in this paste and roll up, putting it in your pans. Let them stand until they become light, and bake. After they are done, eat them with your coffee or tea, just as you like.

CHICKEN PATTIES.—Chop very fine all the dry, poorest bits left from baked chicken; season carefully with pepper, salt and a little celery cut in small bits; make a light puff paste, roll a quarter of an inch thick, cut with a neatly shaped paste-cutter; lay a narrow strip of the paste all round, then put some of the mince on the paste; cut another piece of the same size and lay over. Bake fifteen minutes. This makes a neat dish and is good.

SIRUP OF COFFEE.—This preparation is of great use to those who have long journeys to make. Take half a pound of the best ground coffee; put it in a saucepan containing three pints of water, and boil it down to one pint. Cool the liquor, put it into another saucepan, well scoured, and boil it again. As it boils add white sugar enough to give it the consistency of syrup. Take it from the fire, and when it is cold put into a bottle and seal. When traveling, if you wish for a cup of good coffee, you have only to put two teaspoonsful of the sirup into an ordinary coffee pot, and fill with boiling water. Add milk to the taste, if you can get it.

The Farm and Garden.

Fruit List for the Southwest.

BY JAMES PARKER, SUMMIT, MISSISSIPPI.

We are frequently asked what are the best and most reliable kinds to plant in this region—northern Louisiana and southwestern Mississippi. As the answer to these questions may be of interest to many of your readers, I will try to answer them, through the medium of your able journal, by giving a list of such choice varieties as long and careful experience enables me to conscientiously vouch for. I am not unmindful of the great evils that unreliable lists of fruits entail upon the public, especially when these lists are published in our various agricultural papers with either the tacit or avowed indorsement of the editors. And being conscious of this great evil, I have always, as now, tried to avoid adding to its magnitude by any careless or premature recommendation. Very little theory ever enters into my lists of fruit, except those that are recommended for experiment in new localities.

APPLES.

Red Astrachan.—This is a noble fruit, rich deep crimson. A very valuable market variety. Tree healthy and vigorous. Ripens from last of May to June 10.

Sweet Bough.—Large, straw color, very sweet and crisp. Excellent for market. Ripens last of June to July 20. Tree a moderate grower, very healthy and bears early.

Garretson's Early.—A large, firm, pale yellow apple, of a pleasant subacid flavor. Good for market. July 25.

Primate.—A splendid, large yellow apple, with a beautiful blush. An excellent market fruit. Ripens last of July. Tree a robust grower, and an early and abundant bearer.

Duchess of Oldenburg.—A large, handsome, showy, red striped apple, of a fine, pleasant flavor. Fine for market. Tree rather tardy in growth, but bears enormous crops at an early age. This was the pride of the orchard here the past season. It has a very distinct and peculiar habit from most apple trees, as it bears its fruit all through the body of the tree on short spurs, which looks very ornamental.

Rhode's Orange.—Another excellent apple. Color red, splashed with orange. Last of July. Tree vigorous and healthy. An early and profuse bearer.

Bruce's Summer.—A large, striped red and yellow apple. Flavor excellent. Ripens last of July. Tree a fine, upright grower.

Robinson's Superb.—Well it deserves the name superb. Large and handsome. Fruited this season to perfection. Last of July. Tree a splendid, healthy grower and good bearer.

Sugar Loaf.—This apple is well known in this county (Pike) as a reliable late summer and early autumn apple.

Bradford's Best.—Medium, conical; color dull red, striped. Flavor good. August is its time of ripening. Tree a splendid grower and a fine bearer.

Belle de Havre.—Color greenish dull russet, with streaks of red interveined, sometimes showing a light red cheek. Remarkably sound, of a pleasant high flavor, and very juicy. Tree a fair grower, and bears equally through the body of the tree on spurs. In favorable seasons, September 1 would be about its time of ripening, though it ripened the last of July the past season. That was owing to a long and hot dry spell.

Taunton.—It is needless to say anything of this king of apples. It is indispensable to every collection.

Yarkee.—Is reliable as a constant bearer. Size medium; bright red color. It may be classed as an early fall apple. Tree vigorous and healthy, but of a low-spreading habit.

Of the later varieties, Hockett's Sweet, Southern Winter, Yates, Stevenson's Winter, Shockley, Residence (the second time we saw it fruited.) Southern Limbertwig and Carter are among the best.

This list of apples I can recommend without fear of adverse criticism, as I have positive proofs of their reliability in various localities. I could add a large number of varieties equally as good, but this list will be sufficient for the present.—Rural Alabamian.

Angora Goats.

Turf, Field and Farm says: The large number of these animals exhibited at the late California State Fair, held at Sacramento, shows the production of the fine fleece clipped from this variety of the Capra family is growing into important industry, and is now considered of more importance than the raising of sheep. The Angora is often misnamed, being called the Cashmere goat. In Asia, whence the stock comes, there are nearly twenty varieties of fleece-bearing goats, and of these the pure Angora is the most valuable. It is known as the primitive goat of Angora, a district of the central portion of Asia Minor. The fleece is very valuable, and is made into shawls, fringes and various fine fabrics known as Cashmere goods. There are now in California about seventy thousand of different grades of Angora blood, the first having been imported in 1861. The fleece from the pure stock commands $1.20 per pound.

Soil Temperature.

M. Becquerel, in his experiments with the electric thermometer, has found that calcareous and siliceous soils absorb and retain more heat than argillaceous and humid soils, and that the temperature of the air above the former is diminished while it is rising to its highest point, but above the argillaceous soil it is increased. These conditions are reversed when the soils are diminishing in temperature. The true real inference from this is that vegetables liable to be injured by frost should be planted on calcareous or siliceous soils, for the danger of frost injury is during the hours when the soil is losing heat. If, however, it is desirable to raise such vegetables on moist clay soils, they should be protected from the cooling action of the earth.

THE UPPER CITY HOTEL,

SITUATED UPON TWO LINES OF DOUble-track railroad, within fifteen minutes' ride of Canal street. Possesses all the conveniences of city life, combined with country pleasantry. The rooms are magnificently furnished, and there is nothing that obstructs the view to the private gardens surrounding the Hotel. Surrounded by a veranda twelve feet wide, two hundred and fifty feet in length, affording a magnificent promenade for the guests of the Hotel. The situation and convenience, with a good table, affords the Proprietor the pleasant duty of naming "THE UPPER CITY" a first-class Family Hotel. We allow our accommodations and our attentions a full guarantee against the influence of runners. It requires but to see and be pleased. oc17 3m

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from 35 een to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

POPE'S CURE FOR
Coughs, Colds, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs.

This preparation was introduced many years ago, after consulting the views of several of the most prominent physicians of New Orleans regarding its formula. The late Dr. Edward Jenner Coxe, author of the work on Inhalations for Diseases of Respiratory Organs was pleased to say: "In my opinion, no better combination for the purpose of relieving the ordinary coughs and colds which prevail can readily be thought of." And nearly twenty years of actual trial has gone far to verify his remark. In bottles, 75 cents each. Try it. JOHN H. POPE, Druggist,

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the Relief of Consumptive Patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the spitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

DR. HENRY'S ROOT & PLANT PILLS.

By cleansing the blood and arousing the liver and secretive organs to a healthy action, Dr. Henry's Root and Plant Pills cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Headache, Pain in the Side, Numbness of the Hands and Feet, Dullness, Chilliness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Loss of Appetite, Bilious Dysentery, Kidney Affections, Constipation, Debility, Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Being free from mercury and other poisons, they can be taken at all times and under all circumstances, without regard to diet, business or pleasure.

They stimulate the weakened and distempered parts into healthy action, giving them strength to disburden themselves and throw off the obstructions which are the first cause of disease, without producing either nausea or griping.

All heavy and drowsy sensations, which are the forerunners of direful diseases, such as Apoplexy, Paralytic Strokes, etc., are effectually warded off by a few doses of these searching Pills.

Full directions around each box, in English, German, French and Spanish. Price, 25 Cents a Box.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. There seems to be a more general disposition to increase crop estimates to 3,500,000 bales, but some count on higher figures. Receipts are curtailed by low water in the tributaries.

The river is 14 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	15,451
Lake		1
Mobile		1,653
Texas		361
Total		17,466

On Saturday the demand was fair throughout the day, and although operations were checked by buyers claiming greater concessions than factors were willing to admit, yet 6,200 bales changed hands at a partial falling off of ¼c. On Monday the movement was continued with still more animation, and 7,700 bales changed hands at firm prices for clean, bright, even-running lists with staple, but easy for all other kinds, showing, however, no quotable variation from the previous falling off. On Tuesday, notwithstanding extremely inclement weather, buyers again came forward with increased spirit, and, although factors were more stringent in their pretensions, the business summed up 8,800 bales. Prices at the same time exhibited some irregularity, a part of the business being at previous rates, but the bulk of it at an improvement of ⅛c. Strict ordinary to good ordinary, with staple, sold at 17¼c., a strong style of good ordinary at 17¼c., strict good ordinary at 17⅜@17⅜c., low middling at 18⅛@18¼c., the latter being the ruling rate, a higher style, not strict, at 18⅜c., middling at 19@19¼c., and strict middling at 19¼@19⅜c. The market closed firm at the subjoined quotations, which nearly agree with last Friday's, but are fully ⅛c. higher than Monday's.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 373,226 bales, against 299,750 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 262,529 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 42,512 to Great Britain, and an increase of 38,670 to France, and of 99,859 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

AND ALSO TO THE

GREAT ADVANTAGES

we possess over others in the same line of business.

In the first place, the EXPENSES incident to our business are not ONE-FOURTH as much in OUR LOCALITY as in the CENTER OF THE CITY.

In the second place, WE BUY FOR CASH and SELL FOR CASH, thus making no BAD DEBTS and always having FUNDS ON HAND to BUY BARGAINS with.

In the third place, we were SINGULARLY FORTUNATE in buying our stock this season, as it was all purchased before the recent GREAT ADVANCE.

In the fourth place, we always keep the BEST-ASSORTED STOCK in the city, and all we ask is

The Honor of a Visit,

OR

A TRIAL ORDER.

Orders receive the PERSONAL ATTENTION of one of the FIRM, and if not FILLED SATISFACTORILY the articles may be returned and the MONEY WILL BE REFUNDED.

A new hotel—the UPPER CITY—has just been completed, and is now in successful operation. It is delightfully located and the charges are moderate. It is situated within two squares of our store.

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture.

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloodstreaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true is "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh.
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan, freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for livers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

LITTLE ALICE.

Blessings on my little Alice!
Be her heart a brimming chalice,
Full of love, and free of malice.

Through life's journey, glad or weeping,
Toiling, resting, waking, sleeping,
God still have her in his keeping.

Jesus! bless my little daughter,
Wash her in the blood which bought her,
Give her drink of living water.

With the bread eternal feed her;
In the way of duty speed her;
For thy name's sake guide her, lead her.

An Address by the United States Centennial Commission.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES: The Congress of the United States has enacted that the completion of the one hundredth year of American independence shall be celebrated by an international exhibition of the arts, manufactures and products of the soil and mine, to be held at Philadelphia in 1876, and has appointed a commission, consisting of representatives from each State and Territory, to conduct the celebration.

Originating under the auspices of the national legislature, controlled by a national commission, and designed, as it is, to "commemorate the first century of our existence, by an exhibition of the natural resources of the country and their development, and of our progress in those arts which benefit mankind, in comparison with those of older nations," it is to the people at large that the commission look for the aid which is necessary to make the centennial celebration the grandest anniversary the world has ever seen.

That the completion of the first century of our existence should be marked by some imposing demonstration is, we believe, the patriotic wish of the people of the whole country. The Congress of the United States has wisely decided that the birthday of the great republic can be most fittingly celebrated by the universal collection and display of all the trophies of its progress. It is designed to bring together, within a building covering fifty acres, not only the varied productions of our mines and of the soil, but types of all the intellectual triumphs of our citizens, specimens of everything that America can furnish, whether from the brains or the hands of her children, and thus make evident to the world the advancement of which a self-governed people is capable.

In this "celebration" all nations will be invited to participate, its character being international. Europe will display her arts and manufactures, India her curious fabrics, while newly-opened China and Japan will lay bare the treasures which for centuries their ingenious people have been perfecting. Each land will compete in generous rivalry for the palm of superior excellence.

To this grand gathering every zone will contribute its fruits and cereals. No mineral shall be wanting; for what the East lacks the West will supply. Under one roof will the South display in rich luxuriance her growing cotton, and the North, in miniature, the ceaseless machinery of her mills converting that cotton into cloth. Each section of the globe will send its best offerings to this exhibition, and each State of the Union, as a member of one united body politic, will show to her sister States and to the world how much she can add to the greatness of the nation of which she is a harmonious part.

To make the centennial celebration such a success as the patriotism and the pride of every American demands will require the co-operation of the people of the whole country. The United States Centennial Commission has received no government aid, such as England extended to her World's Fair, and France to her Universal Exposition, yet the labor and responsibility imposed upon the commission is as great as in either of those undertakings. It is estimated that $10,000,000 will be required, and this sum Congress has provided shall be raised by stock subscription, and that the people shall have the opportunity of subscribing in proportion to the population of their respective States and Territories.

The commission looks to the unfailing patriotism of the people of every section, to see that each contributes its share to the expenses, and receives its share of the benefits of an enterprise in which all are so deeply interested. It would further earnestly urge the formation in each State and Territory of a centennial organization, which shall in time see that county associations are formed, so that when the nations are gathered together in 1876 each commonwealth can view with pride the contributions she has made to the national glory.

Confidently relying on the zeal and patriotism ever displayed by our people in every national undertaking, we pledge and prophesy that the centennial celebration will worthily show how greatness, wealth and intelligence can be fostered by such institutions as those which have for one hundred years blessed the people of the United States.

BAPTISM WITHOUT WATER.

A London paper gives the following account of a new ceremony, the idea of which originated with the clergyman who performed it, the Rev. Charles Voysey, who has made not a little stir in English church affairs before now: Yesterday (October 31) a well-dressed congregation filled St. George's Hall, Langham place; the numbers being due to the announcement that "the service of the dedication and benediction of children would be performed for the first time, being a substitute for the ancient ceremony of baptism." On examining the precincts of the platform and round about (reserved seats) it was plain that but one child was there to be "dedicated" and receive a "benediction." At the left side of the reading-desk stood a highly respectable-looking young couple, and on their left a friend held in her arms a fine male infant, apparently some months old. Godfather or godmother there was none, and the party stood and knelt by themselves—somewhat apart from the occupants of the front reserved seats. All eyes were naturally turned upon them, but the parents did not cease to pay the utmost attention to their devotions. When the usual hymns were sung and prayers said, the Rev. C. Voysey descended from the platform or stage, and, taking his place in front of the parents of the child, commenced the "order of service for the dedication and benediction of children," composed by himself, and performed yesterday for the first time. It should be stated that it was after the reading of the second lesson that the "service" was commenced. The latter began with an exhortation, in which occurred the following passages: "The father and mother of the child now present desire us to join with them in giving thanks to the Lord and Giver of life for his precious gift to them, for all his mercy in supporting them under their anxieties, and for granting a happy issue out of much pain and sorrow. They have brought this child into the congregation of those who love the Lord and trust him, that we may with one accord make our prayers on his behalf, that he may grow up in health of mind, body and estate, and be a blessing to his family, to his country, and to the world at large. * * * By this our solemn service we would, as it were, dedicate and consecrate this infant's soul and body to the service of God." Then followed prayers for the parents and child, with responses from the choir. After the singing of a hymn Mr. Voysey turned to the father and mother, and asked: "What is the name of this child?" The father answered, but the name was inaudible. The congregation stood all this time, and here the "order of service" prescribes that "the minister shall take the child in his arms" and say certain words "in the name of the congregation." Accordingly Mr. Voysey took the infant, and, resting it on his left arm, said: "We receive this child (naming him) at the hands of his father and mother, and here, with one accord, solemnly dedicate him to the service of Almighty God, our heavenly Father. * * * May God hear our prayer, and make this child a brave soldier of the truth and of every righteous cause." The whole congregation responded, "Amen;" the little fellow crying, not very loudly, the while. The "benediction" came next. Mr. Voysey, addressing the infant by his newly acquired name, said: "We give thee welcome in the name of the Lord; the Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord mercifully encompass thy life with joy and peace. The eyes of the Lord be ever upon thee to give thee courage under temptation and to cheer thy heart in the day of thy sorrow," etc. At the conclusion of the "welcome" the congregation said, "Amen," and then Mr. Voysey gave back the child to its parents. The ceremony ended by the singing of "Glory to God in the highest," followed by a hymn of praise and thanksgiving from the revised prayer book. The services of the day were then proceeded with.

Treatment of the Horse Disease.

The following instructions as to the treatment of the disease have been sent out by the Southern Express Company for the guidance of all the branch offices of that company, and, as coming from that source, are entitled to consideration:

When the symptoms first appear commence feeding warm mashes of bran and hay. Give water after feed—not before. Keep the horse well and warmly blanketed. Do not use the horse unless compelled to do so, and then he must not be driven faster than a walk. Put on a blanket whenever he is standing still. If the horse refuses to eat the mash, then give him oatmeal gruel; give a quart or two at a time; pour down or give it from a bottle.

The horse will have a sore throat. Examine, and, when seen, apply the following mixture outwardly, rubbing thoroughly from the jaws to the chest twice a day: Take and mix four ounces of tincture of arnica, four ounces chloroform, four ounces ammonia and four ounces of sweet oil, in addition to the oatmeal remedy. You will buy a piece of quarter-inch rubber tube or pipe eighteen inches long; put in one end about a tablespoonful of finely pulverized alum, insert the tube in the mouth to and beyond the roots of the tongue, and then blow the powder in the throat. Use this when the throat becomes sore or much irritated. Use this with discretion. Buy an eight-ounce rubber ball syringe, and inject up each nostril the following mixture four times in the twenty-four hours, and continue till you are well satisfied that the liquid has gone well up the nostrils.

Mixture.—One pound of chloride (chlorate?) of potash to three gallons of soft water. Mix thoroughly.

Should the horse be taken with chills, it is a sure evidence of being feverish, and immediate care is required. You will then give thirty drops of the following mixture every hour until the horse is relieved: One ounce of aconite and three ounces of water. Mix and use.

The horse must be kept from the rain and cold winds. The stables must be kept free of wet or moisture, using sawdust to soak it up, and take it off immediately. Feed light food, and give plenty of fresh air; a little water often, not cold; keep stable clean—use a little chloride of lime about the floor. Watch your horses day and night. Good care and warm covering will do as much as medicine.

THE ENGLISH FLAG.

The national flag of England was for some centuries the red cross, dating from the period of English ascendancy in France. Previously the royal color had been white, but, the French assuming it after Henry the Sixth had been crowned at Paris, the victorious English borrowed the device of the vanquished enemy. The Union is composed of the red cross of St. George, the Scotch cross of St. Andrew dating from the incorporation of the two kingdoms in the reign of Anne, and the Irish cross of St. Patrick. The royal standard of England has varied its devices according to the devices of her kings. The house of York had a famous badge—the rose en soleil. Henry the Seventh exhibited the rose and crown. The Plantagenets were fond of the leopard; whence came Napoleon's threatening allusions, and his boast that "he would drive the leopard into the sea." The lion was first borne by Richard the First, whence, probably, his nom de guerre of "Cœur-de-Lion."

NO PERSON can possibly know whether there is in him the tendency to inebriety until it is stimulated into development. No person can possibly even have this development except by the use of alcohol. The man who totally abstains is safe, even though the tendency to inebriety may lurk within him—the fearful legacy of an ancestor. The man who drinks, no matter how cautiously or moderately, may wake up this devil within him, which no human power can control. Health and safety are on the side of abstinence, while danger, disease and premature death are in the pathway of the habitual drinker.—Herald of Health.

They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encominms from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

SWORD AND PLOW.

FROM THE GERMAN OF WOLFGANG MUELLER.

There once was a count—so I've heard it said—
Who felt that his end drew near;
And he called his sons before his bed,
To part them his goods and gear.

He called for his plow, he called for his sword,
That gallant, good and brave;
They brought him both at their father's word,
And thus he his blessings gave:

"My firstborn son, my pride and might,
Do thou my sword retain;
My castle on the lordly height,
And all my broad domain.

"On thee, my well-loved yonnger boy,
My plow I here bestow;
A peaceful life shalt thou enjoy
In the quiet vale below."

Contented sank the sire to rest,
Now all was given away;
The sons held true his last behest,
E'en on their dying day.

Now tell us what came of the steel of flame,
Of the castle and its knight!
And tell us what came of the vale so tame,
And the humble peasant wight!

O ask not of me what the end may be!
Ask of the country round:
The castle is dust, the sword is rust,
The height is but desert ground.

But the vale spreads wide in the golden pride
Of the autumn sunlight now;
It teems and it ripens far and wide,
And the honor abides with the plow.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE.

The thing to be lamented is that the moment men of science get hold of a fact they instantly begin to set it in opposition to God's word. Bnt the vaunted "fact" of Tnesday often takes another shape on Wednesday, and by Thnrsday is fonnd to be no fact at all. The truth is that geology, as a science, consists mainly of probable guesses. "That field of peat," says Sir Charles Lyell, "has probably been 7,000 years in conrse of formation." "No," replies a friend of his own, in a pnblished criticism, "I think it qnite possible that it has only been 700 years in growing." A piece of pottery is fonnd in the valley of the Nile, and a geologist immediately argnes that it mnst have lain there more than 20,000 years. Bnt an antiquary soon points ont marks npon it which show it to be less than 2,000 years old. Yet it is npon guesses of this kind, which do not amonnt to a tenth part of a proof, that the Lyells and Owens and Colensos ventnre boldly to assert that it is clear that Moses knew nothing whatever of the subject on which he was writing. Just in the same spirit do Bnnsen and his followers nnhesitatingly assert that the growth of languages proves that the world mnst be more than 20,000 years old. We refer them to the confnsion of tongnes described by Moses, which at once dissipates their dream. "Oh! bnt that was a miracle," they reply, "and we have made up onr minds never to believe a miracle." Very well, gentlemen, there we must leave yon; for men who make up their minds before inquiring are not acting like reasonable beings. A dozen other little jnntoes are now at work in the same landable fashion. One set is not qnite certain that man was "developed" ont of an ape. Well, and what was the ape "developed" ont of? They do not know. Our comfort in all this is that this infinenza will wear itself out like the Tractarian, or like the infidel fashion of the days of Bolingbroke. Men have been striving to get rid of the Bible and its inconvenient morality for nearly these two thousand years; bnt they were never further off from their end than they are at present.—Shaftesbury.

COST OF EDUCATION.

The average amount of the necessary expenses for a year, at Oxford, for what is called an nnattached student, is about $236; and the results "prove that a carefnl student can get through his Oxford career for £50 a year"—about $250. The amonnt of intellectual life and indnstry developed by the nnattached system compares favorably with that common among the average members of a college. $250 a year wonld be considered by most boys at American colleges as a small allowance for a year's expenses. Williams College, Massachnsetts, was fonnded in 1793. In round numbers, and including only the necessaries of life—snch as board, lodging, washing and tnition—the total cost of living at this college dnring the school year is not more than $200. The University of Virginia, founded in 1816 nnder the auspices of Jefferson in Charlottesville, a small town of Albemarle county, Virginia, offers little inducements for nnusual extravagance. The expenses amonnt to less than $300 a year. A year's residence at Cornell University, opened in 1868, costs abont $300. At Yale College and Harvard, the first chartered in 1701, and the second in 1638, the cost of living is higher. At Harvard a student's yearly expenses amount on an average to $400, which is about a year's expenses at Yale. These figures will cover only a yonng man's necessary expenses. Traveling expenses, clothes and the cost of personal indnlgences cannot be estimated.—New York Observer.

SCIENTIFIC.

Many large halls, as for instance the new Chicago Chamber of Commerce, are so constructed that a speaker's voice seems broken into a hundred echoes. An exchange speaks of a conrt room where this was remedied in a very simple manner. It was by stretching three or four fine wires each way across the room, thns checking the sonnd waves and preventing any reverberation.

Sensation in the Mouse's Ear.—Dr. Schobl, of Pragne, has made the distribntion of nerves to the ear of the monse a snbject of special examination, and calls attention to the fabnlous richness of this organ in nerves, the bat's wing being in comparison but poorly supplied. The ear of a mouse of ordinary size presents, on an average, six thousand nerve terminations, or, for both ears, twelve thousand. The fnnction of this elaborate development is probably, as in the case of the bat's wing, to enable the animal to guide its way throngh dark, narrow passages.

Temperature of the Polar Regions.—Prof. Wheildon, of Concord, Massachnsetts, advances, in opposition to what is known as the Gulf Stream theory, an atmospheric theory to acconnt for ameliorations of climate and an open sea in the polar regions. The accounts of arctic voyages, it is stated, show snddden rises of temperatnre when nothing bnt an nnlimited extent of ice is near. These changes, it is considered, could not have been consequences of proximity of open water, which at best wonld be of twenty-nine degrees temperature. The theory of Prof. Wheildon is that open water, melting ice, rain after snow, and other phenomena of the sort in arctic regions are not caused by winds warmed by an open sea, but by a circnlation of air in which warm winds descend from npper atmospheres; being a circnlation by which winds heated at the equator reach the poles.

Sympathetic Vibrations.—At the late meeting of the American Scientific Association Prof. Joseph Lovering, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, gave an interesting address on vibration, illnstrated by an experiment. It was presnmed that the members were more or less familiar with Milde's experiment with a tnning fork and vibrating thread. This optical method of Milde is very mnch improved by using a large bar of iron and perpetnating the motion by means of magnetic excitement, the vibration being thns maintained for any length of time. A cord twenty or thirty feet in length is thns thrown into vibration. When the first snspension bridge was bnilding in England a fiddler offered to fiddle it away. Striking one note after another he eventnally hit its vibrating note or fnndamental tone, and threw it into snch extraordinary vibrations that the bridge bnilders had to beg him to desist. Only recently a bridge went down under the tread of infantry in France, who had not broken step, and three hnndred were drowned. An experiment is often referred to of a tnmbler or a small glass vessel being broken by the freqnent repetition of some particnlar note by the human voice. It is said, and may be true, that certain German tavern-keepers increase their custom by the occasional performance of this feat.

A New Sense.—When passing along a street I can distingnish shops from private honses, and even point ont the doors and windows, etc., and this whether the door be shnt or open. When a window consists of one entire sheet of glass it is more difficult to discover than one composed of a nnmber of small panes. From this it wonld appear that glass is a bad condnctor of sensation, or, at any rate, of the sensation specially connected with this sense. When objects below the face are perceived the sensation seems to come in an oblique line from the object to the upper part of the face. While walking with a friend in Forest lane, Stratford, I said, pointing to a fence which separated the road from a field: "Those rails are not qnite as high as my shoulders." He looked at them, and said they were higher. We, however, measured, and found them about three inches lower than my shoulder. At the time of making this observation I was about four feet from the rails. Certainly in this instance facial perception was more accnrate than sight.—When the lower part of a fence is brickwork, and the upper part rails, the fact can be detected, and the line where the two meet easily perceived. Irregularities in height and projections, and indentations in walls, can also be discovered. A similar sense belongs to some part of the animal creation, and especially to bats, who have been known to fly about a room without striking against anything, after the cruel experiment had been made of extracting their eyes.—Levy's Blindness and the Blind.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science. Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College	$60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department	40 00
Contingent expenses	5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayon Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.
ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Comodor M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of Geography, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a unity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, A. M., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are scientifically progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

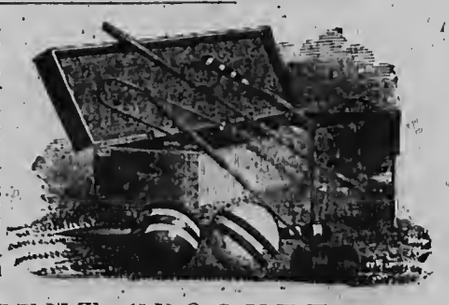
BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATtention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.



THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1872. NO. 51.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Attorney General Williams telegraphs to Pinchback, of Louisiana, as follows: "Requisition of the Legislature transmitted by you is received. Whenever it becomes necessary, in the judgment of the President, the State will be protected from domestic violence."

AUGUSTA, GA., Dec. 11.—Four inches of snow here—the heaviest for years.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The Attorney General has, with the approval of the President, submitted a plan of compromise for the existing difficulties in the Alabama Legislature.

It suggests the reorganization of the House; also that the votes of the member for Barbour be counted in the House, with a view of seating whoever is found to be properly elected.

The member to be seated during the contest who has Ragland's certificate.

It proposes that the contest for Senators in districts where disputes have arisen to be settled in a similar manner, and makes further provisions for the compensation of officers and members during a temporary organization of the House, while the contests are pending.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12.—Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, fell dead this morning, while dressing, at his residence on North Broad street.

Mr. Forrest's servants repaired to his room before ten o'clock this morning, as it was later than his usual hour for coming down. They found him lying on the bed, apparently suffering from apoplexy. He had been exercising with dumb-bells, and had evidently nearly completed dressing, having been adjusting his necktie when stricken down. He died in about half an hour after being discovered. He leaves no immediate relatives, his only sister having died several years ago.

KEY WEST, Dec. 12.—The steamship St. Louis, from New Orleans to New York, sprung a leak on the eighth, at 8.20 P. M., about one hundred and twenty miles from Southwest bar. All the steam and deck pumps were kept working until the fires in the main boilers were extinguished by water. The donkey engine and deck pumps were kept going until the water also put out the fire in the boiler of the donkey engine. The water came in at the rate of one foot per hour.

At two A. M. on the ninth the boats were launched and every one on board left the steamer. The boats lay by the steamer until she went down, which took place at 5.30 P. M. on the same day. The boats were steered for the Tortugas, and, after being on the water for thirty hours, the officers, crew and passengers were picked up by the ship Record, Captain Leumsresque, of Liverpool, and transferred to the pilot boat, Captain Whitehead, off Key West. Captain Whitehead took charge of the boats, and safely landed every soul on board.

WASHINGTON, December 13.—Hon. Aleck Boarman, M. C. from Louisiana, and Attorney General Ogden, of Louisiana, had an audience with the President this morning.

The President listened attentively and considerately to the painful story of the troubles in Louisiana, but gave but little encouragement to the views or wishes of these gentlemen. They begged the President not to consider this as a quarrel between Warmoth and Kellogg, but as a question involving every interest of Louisiana.

The Judiciary Committee will report favorably on the bill making the President's salary $50,000 per annum.

Official and semi-official dispatches received here indicate that both Legislatures accept the Attorney General's plan of compromise in Alabama affairs.

A Virginia delegation, composed of members of Congress and citizens of Virginia and West Virginia, called upon the President, and through their chairman, Colonel Charles S. Carrington, thanked him for the favorable mention of canals in his message. Colonel Carrington's address was quite long.

The President replied as follows: "I appreciate the great importance of this work to the commercial interests of the nation, and am glad the subject has been brought to the attention of Congress. I hope Congress will give it sufficient encouragement to insure its completion. The enormous productions of the Western and Southern States interested in this route demand an outlet to tide water on the Atlantic coast; and these interests are so important that they must ultimately compel the completion of this work in some manner."

BOSTON, Dec. 13.—It is probable that the entire mayoralty vote of the city will be recounted. Ten wards have already made application for such recount.

Workmen pass from one section to the other in the Hoosick tunnel.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The project for the introduction of salt water into the city of New York, for the purpose of extinguishing fires, was under consideration by the Aldermanic committee.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—President Grant to-day received by telegraph a copy of the memorial of the citizens' committee of New Orleans, setting forth their grievances. This memorial was soon after placed in the hands of Attorney General Williams.

The information that the committee will start for Washington, probably to-day, was also received, but, judging from what was said this morning by Attorney General Williams, their mission will be futile, as the general government is inflexibly fixed in its determination to support the Pinchback State government.

The Department of Justice has closely investigated all the facts in the case, and is satisfied with the course which has been officially taken here by the administration.

General Emory last night telegraphed to the President that danger of a collision existed between the police and militia, and asked for instructions.

A reply was sent, at a late hour, instructing him in effect not to take sides with either party, but to hold his forces in readiness to preserve the peace, and to interfere only in case of necessity for that purpose.

L. Q. C. Lamar, Congressman elect from Mississippi, was stricken with paralysis to-day. Dr. Garnett says he will recover.

HARTFORD, December 14.—Charles Blaksley was sentenced to-day to ten years' imprisonment for attempting to wreck a railroad train.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Thomas Dunham was arrested to-day attempting to sell a razed Mississippi bond. He had $40,000 worth, all of which he admitted were altered very lately.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 14.—The bridge across the Yalahusha river, at Grenada, Mississippi, built jointly by the Mississippi and Tennessee and Mississippi Central railroads, was burned at five o'clock this evening by sparks from an engine. It will require several weeks to rebuild it.

MONTGOMERY, December 14.—Both houses meet on Tuesday noon to consider the compromise suggested by the Attorney General.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 15.—Four hundred and seventy-one horses have died from epizootic in the last four weeks.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Supreme Court—Exparte H. C. Warmoth: "We are all of the opinion that when a final decree shall be rendered in the Circuit Court in this case, an appeal will lie to this court.

"We are also of opinion that the court has no jurisdiction in the case to issue a writ of prohibition until an appeal is taken."

RICHMOND, Dec. 17.—Edward A. Pollard, editor and author, is dead.

MONTGOMERY, Dec. 17.—The Legislature met in accordance with the Attorney General's plan. The Lieutenant Governor presided in the Senate. The Republicans elected a temporary clerk. In the House they will have a majority of six to eight.

WHEELING, W. VA., Dec. 17.—The bill to move the capital of West Virginia hither passed the House.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Dec. 13.—It is rumored that Bismarck is about to resign the presidency of the Prussian Council of Ministers, in order to devote himself exclusively to his duties as chancellor of the German empire.

ROME, Dec. 15.—A committee of the Chamber of Deputies, who have under consideration the religious corporations bill, at their sitting yesterday, adopted a resolution declaring that the suppression of the Society of Jesus, including the chief establishment of the order in Rome, is imperatively demanded by the interests of the nation. The announcement of this action was received by the Liberal deputies with enthusiastic applause.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—Disraeli's wife is dead.

VALPARAISO, Dec. 16.—A severe shock of earthquake was experienced here on the night of the twelfth. No damage done, however.

FROM THE WORK.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: While we have no navigation in all this Red river country, and a great scarcity of provisions in the way of groceries, and a general outcry of hard times, with meager church collections, dry weather, and no prospect of any sudden change for the better, it is a matter of some comfort to know that the church on this district is doing something to make the preachers more comfortable and permanent, and to advance her interests.

Shreveport station has built a parsonage this year, at a cost of more than $4,000.

Caddo circuit has made arrangements to relieve her parsonage of debt, to put it in good repair, supply it with heavy furniture, and to put a substantial fence around the lot.

Mansfield circuit has lately bought a parsonage, and the property will admit of being handsomely improved.

On Pleasant Hill circuit they have a parsonage, but it is badly out of repair. If Bro. Parvin does not put it in living condition it will be because he is so much absorbed in building his new church. This is the greatest wonder of all: that in defiance of the times, in the village of Pleasant Hill they are putting up a commodious house of worship, at a cost of some $3,000. Somebody deserves praise, and, as Bishop Andrew said to us: "The Lord will know where to put the star."

Springville circuit built a parsonage last year, and Bro. Stayton has added to it with his own hands, and made it a snug and comfortable preacher's home.

Now you see that out of eight circuits and stations on the district, five of them have homes for their preachers. We shall not be surprised if these circuits which have homes for their preachers will be more easily supplied with preachers, and good preachers, than those that have none. No circuit has a right to complain of its preacher that does not provide a home for him.

J. P.

OUR OLD FRIEND Mr. Lapice has been heard from. He went to Java, where he succeeded in selecting a quantity of cane which he considers exactly suited to our soil and climate, and which yields far better than any we have ever used. According to a statement made by him in a letter to a friend:

"He has procured about eleven thousand cuttings of a variety of ribbon cane, of a violet color. It has made the fortune of sugar planters in Java, who have for it abandoned the common ribbon cane. It has all the qualities required by the soil and climate of Louisiana—a firm rind, well-developed eyes, abundant leaves to protect it. It has strong roots. There are faint and minute stripes separating the eyes, and others across the stalk near the joints. It will yield six hogsheads an acre, resisting as well the most obstinate drought and the most abundant rains. It yields from eight to ten feet for the mill; is about two inches in diameter; at eight months after being planted it is fit for the mill, and the juice stands at a consistency of from eight to ten degrees Baume. This cane originated in Cheribon and Batavia, and has been introduced by Messrs. Gonsalves and Vander Brotie, by birth Hollanders, and among the richest inhabitants of Java. The latter gentleman has made twenty thousand hogsheads of sugar this year." Times.

DEPARTURE OF THE CITIZENS' COMMITTEE.—The departure, last evening, of the citizens' committee, who bear New Orleans' memorial to the President, attracted to the levee as large, enthusiastic and deeply interested an assemblage as has been brought together in months, and their earnestness and respectability would have been convincing proof to the most skeptical of the great concern with which the recent outrages are regarded.—Times, December 16.

SOME ROBBERS having broken into a gentleman's house, went to the bed of a servant and told him if he moved he was a dead man. "That's a lie," said he, "for if I move I'm sure that I am alive."

A NATION'S character is the sum of its splendid deeds; they constitute one common patrimony, the nation's inheritance. They awe foreign powers, they arouse and animate our own people.

CLIMATE AND INTEMPERANCE.

Dr. Bowditch, in his report to the Massachusetts State Board of Health, after collating official reports from fifty different statutes, derives the following law:

"Intemperance prevails the world over, but it is very rare at the equator. The tendency increases according to latitude, becoming more frequent and more brutal and disastrous in its effects on man and society as we approach the northern regions."

Dr. Beard denies this law, and contends that the equatorial natives are great drunkards. But he says:

"The Spaniards, Portuguese and French are everywhere temperate, and in South America and the West Indies they carry with them, and bequeath to their descendants—even to those of mixed blood—the temperate habits of Spain, Portugal and France; but to judge the aborigines of those countries by the descendants of European colonists is obviously unfair.

"The Cosmic Law of Intemperance, to which my researches seem to point, may be thus stated: 'Intemperance has existed in all recorded ages, and in all parts of the globe where alcoholic liquors of any kind are attainable. It is most common and most disastrous in its effects in the colder regions of the northern hemisphere, and especially in those climates that are made disagreeable and trying by extremes of heat and cold. It is, on the whole, for various reasons, less common in the tropics, and is most rare and least disastrous in its effects in the southern portions of the north temperate zone, where the climate is uniformly mild and agreeable.'

"The prevalence and the injuriousness of the vice of intemperance depend not only on the climate, but on race, on the population, and on the quality and cheapness of the alcoholic liquors. It would be a very great error to infer that the distribution of intemperance, as expressed by the above law, was the result of climate alone. The south temperate zone I exclude from consideration, for the reason that it is so limited in extent and population. South America is probably the most temperate of all the continents, while the palm of intemperance is borne by Europe. The most temperate region of the globe—the temperate belt, as I term it—includes Spain, Italy, southern France, Turkey, Syria, Persia, north Africa and southern China. In these regions there is crime enough of every kind—murder, brigandage, licentiousness of the greatest extreme, and any amount of ignorance and degradation—but there is comparatively very little of intemperance.

"An error of temperance agitators has been to suppose that to abolish alcohol would be to abolish intemperance. Alcohol is only one of the very many varieties of stimulants and narcotics, and excess in the use of it is by no means so disastrous as excess in the use of some of the others. Now, the habit of using stimulants and narcotics of some kind or other began with human history; it antedates by thousands of years the discovery of distillation, or even of wine itself. Nations that, by climate or soil, are deprived of one form, resort to some other, and by simple or complex manufacture, or by importations, they will obtain it. If, by virtue of legislation, they are debarred from any one variety, they atone for the deprivation by greater excess in the use of the others. Long ago I observed that total abstinence advocates were very free users of tobacco, especially in the form of chewing; and the enormous and alarming increase in the habit of opium-eating in this country, during the last thirty years, is largely the result of moral and legislative agitation on the subject of temperance; and yet this moral agitation has only affected a certain portion of society, and prohibitory legislation is almost a failure. If, now, we could conceive of a state of society in which, in our climate and with our present organization and appetites, the habit of total abstinence from alcoholic liquors should be universal, or if a prohibitory law should be really enforced, we should expect to find a great increase in the amount of opium imported. A greater evil than the general extension of the opium-eating habits of the Eastern nations to this country could not be imagined; a more destructive calamity could not be prayed for by the bitterest enemy of republican institutions. With our race and climate, with our inherited and acquired nervousness, it would destroy the national life—physical, intellectual and moral—and might alone reduce us to a lower grade than the people of Asia.

"The most powerful ally of the temperance cause in recent times, in this country, has been the increasing nervous susceptibility of our brain-working classes, that compels them to abstain not only from ardent spirits, but also from tobacco, from tea, and, in our Northern States, from coffee. In my own practice and observation among the intellectual classes I find very many more who are injured by coffee and tobacco than by alcoholic liquors; in the lower ranks of society this rule does not hold good. This extreme nervousness of the intellectual Americans of both sexes is the result partly of the dryness of our climate, and partly of our institutions."

TRANSPLANTING.—A PARABLE.

A Prince would make a garden of delights for himself, and looked far and wide for beautiful trees. In a field grew a young tree, fresh and fair, and the eye of the Prince rested on it.

"Give me," he said, "this for my Paradise."

Then the tree rustled with pride, and one leaf said to another: "We are chosen to a glorious lot."

But that day came men with sharp axes and spades and mattocks and began cutting a trench all round the tree, and every stroke severed a root and sent a thrill of pain to the heart of the tree. In dismay the leaves and branches whispered to each other: "How cruel! Why is this? What! every root and fiber cut! This must be the work of an enemy." Yet at night came down silver-footed dews and whispered: "Fear not—these are the transplanting pains; they must be or thou couldst not be ready for thy place in Paradise." So the tree abode in patience; though root after root was cut, till at length it stood alone, receiving its nourishment more from heaven than earth; for the moist clouds brooded it, and the silver dews nourished it, and the rains fostered it; and though the roots by which it sucked up earth-juice were cut on all sides, it was still alive with a heavenly freshness.

But now came along the gardener and said: "One thing more we must do, and the tree is ready for our Lord's garden. We must cut the great tap-root."

Then they digged deeper, where the strong tap-root ran down and laid hold on the earth, and with sharp, unsparing blows cut it off.

Then the tree shivered in mortal anguish. "This is death," it cried. "No," said the heavenly dews, "this is immortal life. Now thou art ready for Paradise. No earth-bonds hold thee, and whensoever the hour cometh thou shalt be raised and taken to the eternal gardens, and thy roots shall take hold on immortality. For behold, in the Paradise of our God is the place waiting for thee, and now art thou ready to be taken."

So the tree stood in solemn patience, and a day came when it was gone; but the Prince smiled when they planted it in heaven, and said: "Now cast forth thy roots for eternity. Thou shalt go no more out forever!"

Dear friends, there are some of you whose history is written in this parable. Have you learned the sacred lessons of pain? Have you learned the gain of earthly losses, the riches of present poverty? Have you accepted a lonely heart and empty home as reminders of a nobler and better joy to come? In the church each Sunday, in your own familiar and habitual conversation and thoughts, you have admitted the glorious truth that you were made for immortality. You have admitted that so long as a portion of your conscious existence lay beyond this life, this life was to it but as a moment.

Yes, all of us who believe in immortality must believe that the great future is so vast that this present life will be looked back upon from it as we now look back on the playthings of our childhood and the cradle of our infancy. What griefs had we then, many and sore, because they who loved us wisely managed us in view of our whole life, and not of our childish preferences! How we grieved, broken-hearted, over childish treasures taken or wishes ungratified! Now we look back and smile.

If this life were not such a nursery education, and God the tender Father, then indeed we might believe, as the ancient heathen did, that the whole conduct of life in relation to human affection was a cruel mockery!

"The gods envy the happy, and devise some way to destroy those who enjoy too much," was the maxim of antiquity. The voice of Christianity says: "Forget not the exhortation that speaketh unto you as unto children. Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou art rebuked of him."

Saddest of all things it is to see those to whom Almighty love has sent the noble and sacred present of a supreme and awful sorrow—who despise the gift and murmur at the Giver; sad to see those withering whose earthly roots are cut, and who feel not yet wherefore. May the great loving Father send to us all this best wisdom, without which life is only a cruel mockery!—Christian Union.

INTELLIGENCE OF DOGS.

At one of the Newfoundland fisheries, a boat and crew trying to enter a small harbor found themselves outside a long line of breakers, in great peril. The wind and weather had changed since the boat went out in the morning, and her getting safely back seemed pretty doubtful. The people on shore saw her danger, but could not help her. Every moment increased the danger, and anxious friends ran to and fro. Among the crowd was a large dog, which seemed fully alive to the peril of the boat and the anxiety of those on shore. He watched the boat, surveyed the breakers, and appeared to think as earnestly as anybody, What could be done?

At last he boldly plunged into the angry waters and swam to the boat. The crew thought he wanted to join them, and tried to take him aboard. No, he would not go within their reach, but swam around, diving his head and sniffing, as if in search for something.

What was it? What did the creature mean? What did he want?

"Give him the end of a rope," cried one of the sailors, divining what was in the poor dog's brain; "that's what he wants."

A rope was thrown out; the dog seized the end in an instant, turned round, and made straight for the shore, where, not long after—thanks to the intelligence and sagacity of Tiger—the boat and crew were landed safe and sound.

A gentleman belonging to Greenock, who was among the saved from the wreck of the ill-fated screw steamer Anglo-Saxon, describes, in a letter to a relative residing in that town, a remarkable circumstance connected with the landing of one of the boats belonging to the ship. The letter is dated St. John's, May 1. He says:

"The last time I saw Captain Burgess (the commander of the Anglo-Saxon) he was assisting to lower the small boat, in which was embarked twenty-two men, one lady and myself. We left the ship without food, water, compass or sufficient clothing. We were knocked about in a dense fog all day, not knowing whither we were drifting. Toward evening, however, we espied a cliff off Belleisle, when we steered for Cape Race, which we made. Approaching the shore, we saw a man carrying a gun, and accompanied by two large Newfoundland dogs. He evidently saw us, and made signals for us to approach the shore cautiously. We followed his course for some time, till he was hid from us by a large cliff, which it was impossible he could descend. The two dogs, however, soon appeared descending this dangerous headland, and, reaching the water, dashed precipitately into the sea, howling dreadfully. Having swam out close to our boat, they then turned toward the shore, keeping a little distance ahead of us, indicating that we were to follow them. Our singular pilots seemed to understand the danger of our position, as we did not dare to deviate from the course they were leading us without a loud howl being uttered by them. At last we arrived in a large natural creek, where a safe landing was effected. No other similar creek was to be seen, which caused us all to wonder at the sagacity displayed by these dumb animals. No doubt our preservation was in a great measure attributable to these noble dogs. An alarm having been raised, a rope was let down by a pulley, and we were all taken up the cliff, which is one hundred and fifty feet in height. We were, shortly after enabled to reach the lighthouse, where every attention was paid to us."

WE MAY think foolish thoughts, but should never express them.

OVER THE RIVER

Over the river they beckon to me—
Loved ones who've crossed to the further side;
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.
There's one with her hair of sunniest gold,
And eyes the reflected light of heaven's own blue;
She crossed in the twilight gray and cold,
And the pale mist hid her from mortal view.
We saw not the angels who met her there;
The gates of the city we could not see;
Over the river, over the river,
My mother stands waiting to welcome me.

Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another, the household stay;
His silver locks waved in the gentle gale,
And dearest father was borne away.
He laid down the staff and waved his hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark;
We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark.
We know he is safe on the other side,
Where all the ransomed and angels be;
Over the river, the mystic river,
My honored parents are waiting for me.

For none return from those quiet shores
Who cross with the boatman cold and pale;
We hear the dip of the golden oars,
And catch a gleam of the swelling sail.
And lo! they have passed from our yearning hearts;
They've crossed the stream and are gone for aye;
We may not sunder the veil apart
That hides from our vision the break of day.
We only know that their barks no more
May sail with us o'er life's stormy sea;
Yet somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore
They watch and beckon and wait for me.

And I sit and think, when the sunset and gold
Are flushing river and hill and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar.
I shall watch for a gleam of the flashing sail;
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand;
I shall pass from sight, with the boatman pale,
To the happy shores of the better land.
I shall know the loved who have gone before;
And joyfully sweet shall the meeting be,
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The angel of death shall carry me.

METHODIST WORSHIP.

BY REV. A. J. YEATER.

Mr. Editor: A writer in the Advocate of November 7, signing himself "Jefferson Hamilton, D. D.," animadverts somewhat severely upon the New York Methodist, on account of certain "marked concessions and a terrible indictment" for which that paper is held responsible. I do not espouse the championship of the Methodist, as it is abundantly able to take care of itself, but I do love candor and honesty in all matters. If I am capable of forming a correct conclusion in regard to the article in your paper, its writer has laid himself liable to the "terrible indictment." He gives two quotations from the Methodist, and aims to make the impression that they are both editorial, and embody the sentiments of that paper. This is a total perversion of the facts.

The editorial in the Methodist, on "The Baldness of Methodist Worship," appeared September 14. Not one idea is advanced in that editorial which your correspondent does not concede. In the Methodist of October 5 some lombastus furioso of a writer, not giving his name, made an attack on the editor's article, as though he was about to bind the Methodist Church hand and foot in the chains of ritualism, and remand it back to the times before the Wesleys, when ministers could officiate at the altar on Sundays, and "play cards, see horse races, go to dances, read novels and go to theaters" during the week. The second quotation by "Jefferson Hamilton, D. D.," is from this anonymous correspondent of the Methodist, which that paper admitted by courtesy in its columns, and in an editorial most emphatically disavowed the sentiments of the writer in his charge against the ministry of the present day as being unconverted; etc. The writer, whoever he is, is evidently a fanatic.

How your correspondent can reconcile it with truth and fair dealing to blend these two articles in the Methodist together, and hold the editor responsible for both, when he took direct issue with his "occasional correspondent" in his charges against the ministry, is for your readers to decide. I am an humble preacher in the Southern Methodist Church, but I read the New York Methodist with interest, and greatly admire its conservative tone, and the fairness with which it discusses all questions. I most cordially indorse its views in regard to the "baldness of Methodist worship," and fondly look forward to the time when the evil will be remedied. Many earnest hearts, to my personal knowledge, are feeling as I do in the matter. There is no religious exercise that so takes hold of the minds and hearts of young people especially as responsive worship. In fact, I know of no other kind of worship but responsive so far as the public exercises of the sanctuary are concerned. The minister is supposed to lead the assembly, and unless the audience have some chance of responding, he does it all. This is the evil we would remedy. Give us a "form of sound words," an orthodox liturgy, and one in which all "can find the places," and you will see new zeal and fervor at once infused into our now dull, monotonous assemblies. At least there could be no harm in trying the experiment. Not holding to the jure divino doctrine of liturgical worship, we could drop it if it worked badly.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The Rev. Jacob Mead Jennings, A. M., M. D., was born in New London, Campbell county, Virginia, June 4, 1804, and died in Greenville, Butler county, Alabama, October 1, 1872.

Dr. Jennings was of a noble and highly honorable ancestry. They were Scotch-English, and Independents in religion. On his mother's side he was descended from the celebrated Robert Bruce, who rightfully contended for the crown. One of his maternal ancestors was a man of superior scholastic attainments and an eminent Presbyterian divine. His paternal ancestry were among the early pilgrims who settled at Plymouth, Massachusetts, and thence emigrated to the State of New Jersey. The father of the subject of this notice, Rev. Dr. Samuel K. Jennings, was a man of splendid intellectual endowments and fine cultivation, who in early life was an infidel, but after his marriage was converted to Christianity and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, his wife being already in that church. It was not long until he was licensed to preach, but afterward went into the Methodist Protestant Church. He was a prominent and leading man in that body, and attained to great eminence and distinction in that branch of Methodism.

The subject of this notice was baptized by the Rev. Stith Mead, and was very faithfully instructed and trained in the rudiments of Christianity. The recollection of his early boyhood was associated with his child-like efforts to be a Christian. His Testament was his constant companion. The closet regularly witnessed his attempts to understand its teachings, while upon his knees he would read its sacred pages. At that period of his life the term Methodist was synonymous with that of true Christian. When he heard of the death of any one he would inquire if he or she was a Methodist. An affirmative answer would satisfy him as to the future of the party. He did not think then that a Methodist could be lost. As he grew up he suffered these habits to be interrupted, until he became wicked even to profanity; but it pleased the Lord to follow him with his Spirit's warnings until he humbled himself and sought mercy, and received the assurance of acceptance through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1827 he was licensed to preach, the Rev. Peter Daub being the presiding elder; but circumstances, which perhaps would have influenced a large majority of young men, led him to change his church relations, and he became a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. He traveled four years as an itinerant in the Virginia Annual Conference of that church. But impaired health drove him to the practice of medicine, and subsequently he removed to Baltimore, where he had been educated and grew up. In 1849 he moved to Tuskaloosa, Alabama, and immediately affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Here he organized the school that became the Tuskaloosa Female College, which was presided over successively by Revs. J. M. Bonnell, D. D., F. M. Grace and R. M. Saunders, and is now prospering under the presidency of the Rev. B. F. Larrabee. In December, 1853, he was received into the Alabama Conference, and served the following charges: 1854, Pickens circuit; 1855–56, Lowndesboro and Hayneville; 1857, Auburn; 1858, Dayton; 1859–60, and a part of 1861, he was presiding elder on the Lowndesboro district. On all these charges he served the church with acceptability and usefulness, although he was much of the time subject to great physical sufferings.

In the spring or summer of 1861 he became chaplain of the Third Alabama Regiment in the Confederate army. He served in this position until the close of 1862. Since that time he has been in the supernumerary and superannuated relation.

As a preacher Dr. Jennings ranked high. He was sound and thoroughly Wesleyan in doctrine, clear in analysis, elegant in diction and fervent in spirit. He was always stately and sublime in his discourses, and not unfrequently eloquent and powerful. In the office of presiding elder he was dignified and courteous, and possessed fine executive ability. As a writer he wielded a ready and facile pen. His scholarship and general intelligence were of a superior order. In general literature and the sciences he was well posted. In drawing, painting and music he was an amateur. His knowledge might be said to be encyclopedian.

His domestic and social qualities were of the finest character. The writer had been intimately associated with him, having been for seven years his presiding elder, and he ever found in him a friend, brother and wise counselor. As a Christian his last days witnessed a deeper consecration and a more fervent devotion of himself and all to God and his service. In his own home, where his mature piety shed its most fragrant sweetness and reflected its brightest sunshine, will his absence be most keenly felt. It was while engaged in family prayer that he was attacked with paralysis, which so speedily terminated in his death. He leaves a noble Christian wife, and children cherished and beloved, and numerous friends to mourn his departure; but precious and consoling is the thought and prospect of reunion beyond "The sunset's radiant glow."

THE BEAUTIFUL.

Who does not love the beautiful? Are there hearts so callous as to plod through life without noticing the beauty which makes our earth radiant? Ay, how many, with souls narrowed by the material, hurry and worry onward with eyes too full of work and gain to perceive the loveliness springing up in their very pathway. Nature is to them but sky and sun and grass, which are needed auxiliaries to comfort—nothing more. But the fragile flower, the glorious sunset, the melody of birds—pshaw! they are charming to the sentimental school-girl, but ridiculous for sensible people, who have a way to make in the world, to be prating about nature's beauties.

Oh me, how I do pity such people! What a dry, hum-drum life theirs must be, debarred the exquisite happiness of communion with nature and nature's God. Nature's God! I wonder if they ever thought of that. The omnipotent hand of the All-Father fashioned those despised creations. Could he make anything trivial? Could they form one leaf of the tiniest flower they crush under foot,—formed so perfectly, tinted so exquisitely?

And I have heard Christians say they had "no use for such things." How can they love the Father without loving his works! What would our lives be without the possession and appreciation of the beautiful! A dull routine of disappointment, trial, trouble, failure, with no bright sunshine to gild the gloomy horizon. Away with such a life, and let God's glorious sunlight stream through the open doors of our hearts, irradiating every gloomy spot!

Thank God for the beautiful! Thank God that in our darkest moments the voice of nature is ever ready to sink with gentle melody into the heart's inmost sanctuary; that communion with her loveliness has power to create an exquisite, peaceful enjoyment; that in listening to her teachings the soul is drawn nearer to the bountiful Giver, and can say tearfully, lovingly, "Thy will be done;" and, rising higher and higher into the spiritually beautiful and its ennobling influences, the soul is fitted step by step for that gloriously beautiful home from whence emanate the sparks which glow in this earthly habitation.

SERIOUS THOUGHTS.

SUGGESTED BY THE DEATH OF AN ACQUAINTANCE.

BY GEORGIA E. ROLAND.

One has been called from the community. She has passed from the familiar scene of life to the unknown one of eternity. Can it be?

Scarce a week has elapsed since she flitted through the house in the enjoyment of good health. But two days have passed since she expected to mingle with the gay in the ball-room! Carefully laid away in the wardrobe is the handsome dress; but, ah! the owner, where is she? Yonder she lies; her ears are forever deaf to the sound of this world; her eyes are forever closed upon its vanities. The mortal is waiting to be borne to the grave; the immortal has already received its sentence at the judgment-seat of Christ. Truly,

"Life is a span, a fleeting hour;
How soon the vapor flies!"

To-day we are here, to-morrow gone. We must all leave this beautiful world, and "the place which knows us now will soon know us no more forever."

Death is stalking about; yet, as I gaze upon nature, I see no change which would indicate its presence. The sky is as cloudless, the moon shines as bright, the zephyr whispers as softly as though the black-winged angel was not hovering near.

Hark! those sounds. Some light heart pours itself out in joyous laughter. It has forgotten the departed neighbor. Thus it is. Like actors we meet on the world's great stage. The brief scene of life closes, and we pass away; yet we are hardly missed. Everything goes on uninterrupted, as though we had never existed. Our demise may leave an aching void in the hearts of near and dear ones; but it is only for awhile. Time in a measure heals the wound. So it always has been, so it always will be.

"It is appointed for us once to die." My turn will come. The hand which clasps this curtain will one day lay powerless by my side. The eyes which drink in the beauty of this evening scene will be closed in death. It may be sooner than I expect. Perchance the passing breeze may convey to me the summons to the "echoless shore." Am I prepared? Momentous question! Would it not be folly to wave it? Shall I neglect my soul?—live as if it belonged to my mortal enemy? No; that would be to destroy it. It was not given to me for that purpose. It would be irrational to think of living, and not to think of living well. Unworthy, indeed, are we of life when we do not live for God.

Shall I conform to the ways of the world? If I please it, what reward does it offer? Pleasures with pain, sweets with snares, while I am in it. When I leave it a sigh, perhaps a tear, then complete forgetfulness. If I live for God, what reward does he promise? "Peace passing all human understanding here, life eternal hereafter!" Then

"What sinners value, I resign;
Lord, 'tis enough that thou art mine."

I must die; but oh! "Hope looks beyond the bounds of time." Faith points to the Redeemer who has triumphed over death, and with his precious blood purchased for me a home in his "Father's house."

Thanks to God! I have entered in at the "door." The path is narrow, but it is the one to which my Savior has pointed me. I could not walk in it alone; but, resting on his strong arm, I feel supported and free from harm. The adversary of souls is mighty; but I trust in God, who is Almighty.

Praise the Lord, O my soul! He has been truly gracious unto thee.

A CONTRAST.

Innocence and guilt—the connection, how incongruous! And yet I have seen them placed side by side in close companionship—the white, fragile jonquil, emblematic of purity, and alcohol, the emblem of destruction.

How the contrast struck me to the heart! Those lovely blossoms seemingly shrinking from the contact, their delicate fragrance smothered in the fumes of that evil upon earth—the one appealing to all that is spiritually beautiful and true, the other arousing all the evil passions in our natures! It seemed to me a warning voice from the flowers' heart must have reached the owner's senses: "Take this baneful power from my side and thy life."

Were there no angels near to snatch them from their degradation, and restore them to their pristine beauty?—to their birth-place, from whence they were plucked and showered gently over the glistening battlements of heaven, and watched by bright spirits as they softly descended to earth's open arms, and bloomed for her children? Gentle monitors! alienated from your companions and doomed to wither in the hateful embrace of sin—no reproach came from your dewy depths, but sadly, uncomplainingly your pure blossoms drooped, lower, lower, meekly teaching a lesson of patience under injury. O lives, doomed, like the little jonquil, to a loathed existence—silent, patient sufferers—your misery cannot reach the callous hearts around you; but it wells up through the din and strife into the clear, pure atmosphere surrounding the "throne," where every whisper is heard. Pitying arms bear it to the fountain issuing from your Brother's side; from whence, with pure robes and radiant brow, it springs joyfully into the loving arms of the Father, and, rising with his blessing, it is descending down, down again until it steals peacefully into your heart's chaos, a balmy chrism from the "All-Father."

What the Religious Census of England Shows.

The religious census of England, which was taken in 1851, gave such a blow to the ecclesiastical world in the Established Church that it has never been repeated since. The Nonconformist, however, is doing at present what the census has failed to do, and its developments present already a religious condition by no means flattering to the Established Church. It is publishing a complete census of the number of places of worship, the number of places of sittings in them, and the denominations by whom they are provided, in all towns above 20,000 inhabitants. The first installment of these returns has already been published, embracing fourteen large provincial towns which have more than a population of 100,000 people. The total aggregate population of these towns is 2,905,400. Their population in 1851 was 2,052,732, so that the increase has been in twenty years 42.4 per cent. In these fourteen towns there are 526 places of worship more than there were in 1851, and the increase in the number of sittings in churches and chapels has increased 44 per cent. The bearing of these figures on the relative strength of the established and non-established churches is shown in the fact that, of these fourteen great towns, there are but six in which the Established Church has increased more rapidly than the others, and eight in which the other churches have outstripped the Established Church. The towns in which the Established Church has a gain are Manchester, Salford, Leeds, Birmingham, Hull and Brighton: those in which the non-established churches are ahead: Bradford, Stoke-on-Trent, Wolverhampton, Newcastle, Portsmouth, Bristol and Liverpool. Taking all these towns together, the census shows that, whereas twenty years ago the Established Church provided 43 per cent. of the church accommodation, it provides in 1872 only 40.2 per cent.; while the non-established churches provided, in 1851, 58 per cent., they now provide 59.8 per cent. As these towns are the large provincial centers of England, containing nearly 3,000,000 in population, it is clearly evident why the government has declined for twenty years to take this religious census. The figures show the weakness of the national claims of the Established Church, and are a convincing proof that the time is not far distant when the people will demand religious equality. They are already sufficient to show that it is the non-established churches which are supporting the largest measure of the religious needs of the people, and that they cannot help materially influencing parliamentary legislation hereafter with regard to all matters connected with the church and the kindred subject of education.

The Five Points Mission, New York City.

The average daily attendance at the day school of this excellent and practical charity has been over 400, and during the past year 875 children have received instruction.—Forty-six children have been placed in good homes, and eighty-four adults sent to places of employment. Food equivalent to nearly 104,000 meals, and 7,609 pieces of clothing, bedding and pairs of shoes, were given to the needy and deserving; and 980 pieces of children's clothing were cut out and made up in the sewing-room of the mission, from new cloth bought by the yard for that purpose. In the third and fourth stories of the mission building there are twenty tenements of three rooms each, which are continually occupied by poor families, rent free, until homes can be found for them.

The free library and reading room, in the cleanly-kept and well-lighted basement, is a credit to the mission and to its efficient librarian, Rev. J. Campbell. A supply of the daily and weekly papers is kept on file, and through the kindness of the Messrs. Harper, Appleton, Carter, Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, Rev. J. S. Hunt, the Methodist Episcopal Tract Society and others, over 200 new books have been added to the library. This attractive place of entertainment keeps scores of men and boys out of the grog shops and other dens of vice every night. The success of the sewing school, which was organized two years ago, by several wealthy ladies residing up town, is gratifying in the extreme. Much larger receipts than it has been receiving for some months past are greatly needed by the society to enable it to extend its work. Many new cases of pressing need present themselves for its consideration, and it depends upon its friends for clothing for those who need it; food for the hungry, fuel for the freezing, and comforts for the sick; and the long lines of suffering, sorrowing men, women and children, with their hunger-bitten countenances, who are sitting and standing in the office of the mission every day, many of them sick and out of employment, should be well fed, clothed and warmed until they are able to provide for themselves.—Christian Intelligencer.

It is related of Dr. Scudder that on his return from his mission in India, after a long absence, he was standing on the deck of a steamer, with his son, a youth, when he heard a gentleman using loud and profane language. "See, friend," said the doctor, accosting the swearer, "this boy, my son, was born and brought up in a heathen country, and a land of pagan idolatry; but in all his life he never heard a man blaspheme his Maker until now." The man colored, blurted out an apology, and looked not a little ashamed of himself.

Alexander Dumas, Sr., was one day asked by a friend to contribute ten francs for the funeral of a bailiff who had died in destitute circumstances. "What!" exclaimed the great novelist, "ten francs for burying a bailiff! Here are one hundred francs—bury ten bailiffs."—Appleton's Journal.

A little girl in Ithaca, just before she died, exclaimed: "Papa, take hold of my hand, and help me across." Her father had died two months before.

A celebrated wit was asked if he knew Theodore Hook. "Yes," he replied, "Hook and eye are old acquaintances."

IN MEMORIAM.

Fredonia Alethea Taylor Massey was born in Jackson, Alabama, March 30, 1842; was married in Jackson, September, 1866; and died in Summerfield, Alabama, November 21, 1871. The funeral was preached by Dr. Mitchell, in Summerfield, November 22.

These three dates inclose the history of a life—its unfolding, its maturity and its close. A short life it seems, if we calculate it by its span of years; but brilliant, and full to overflowing, if we treasure up the prompt fulfillment of the tenderest ministries of life. Oh! how those memories of "days that are no more" throng upon a mother's heart. Friendships, parental care that had followed her from the cradle to the grave, a husband's devotion, her little children's helplessness, kind physicians—all stretched out to save her, and yet she died. The death of a wife, a mother, the sacred and home-spirit of a household—truly does it cut deep and broad into loving hearts, filling them with anguish, and home with sadness.

The one who is gone was a woman of rare excellence. She died at peace with all, and trusting in the God she loved and worshiped, leaving an example of such brightness that it ought to drive away the gloom that has fallen like a dark shadow over loving hearts. At nine years of age she was a pupil of Miss C. H. Holt, of Mobile. Later she attended the high school of St. Louis. Finally her school career was completed at Tuskaloosa Methodist Female College, under the refined and cultivated Mrs. R. M. Saunders, where she graduated with the first honors. At each of these schools her brilliant intellect, coupled with kindly impulses of heart, won for her the love and respect of teachers and companions, retaining them in after-life as friends. It is sad to speak of that high order of mind that rendered her a congenial companion to many gifted persons of her own native State, to remind us of her strong practical sense that created the unostentatious comforts of her own home, or to tell of the energy and heroic courage that, overcoming the weakness and pain of the failing flesh, reigned supreme in spirit in the last hours of consciousness.

A patient sufferer is across "the beautiful river" that flows by the throne of God, and warbles a sweeter song than she sung when here. We can speak comfort to all who loved her, for with the hope of a Christian faith those traits are not lost in death. Sorrow may be our portion here, but from the outer gates of the invisible realm comes the blessed revelation that there is life for us somewhere. We need not ask where, for we can trust that to God's loving providence. Blessed homes, in our Father's many mansions, are prepared for us. God grant that we may so live that when we cross the river of death we may meet her on the shores of the spirit land.

"Over the river they beckon to me—
Loved ones who've crossed to the further side;
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.

. . . . . .

"Yet somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore
They watch and beckon and wait for me."

None knew you so well as [illegible] precious daughter, and your life-picture, [illegible] devotion to your husband and children. Yours was no common love. When a little over seventeen years of age you took a sister under your care to educate. Oh! how my heart was torn with anguish when I saw death claiming you. The future looks very dark without you, my daughter; but I know that I can come to you, though you cannot come to me. I am persuaded that "neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

A. C. T.

Lydie R. Evans, daughter of Captain J. H. and Mrs. Sarah R. Evans, of Camden, Mississippi, was born May 4, 1855. She died at Oxford, Mississippi, October 30, 1872, aged seventeen years, five months and twenty-six days.

Miss Lydie Evans, at the time of her death, was a pupil at Oxford, under the care and tutelage of the Rev. C. H. Bell. She was just verging into womanhood, and had entered, upon the final studies of the curriculum of that popular school. Always unselfish, gentle and dutiful, with a sweetness of temper, an unsullied beauty of affection, endowed with a sprightly intelligence that never failed to win for her a place of honor in her studies, she was the idol and hope of her parents, the beloved of a wide circle of relatives and friends, the just boast of her teachers in every department of scholarship, and the universal favorite of her companions at school. Without the frivolity that proclaims the weakness of youthful character, and blessed from childhood with those traits, the beauty and worth of all she possessed within herself the just grounds of parental pride and expectation. Her death must blight the earthly hopes, joys and interest of a father and mother, and leave long shadows of sorrow upon the house where her presence so often shed the radiance of love and contentment.

Some time during the last term of the session at Oxford she became concerned on the subject of religion. Always truthful in her character, she was one of those who could not be satisfied with pretenses of Christian experience; and under the wise counsel of those evangelical teachers of Christ's family the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church—and sought and solved the great problem of human life, in agony and tears, only where it can be solved—at the foot of the cross. And, as an unfailing result, in the deep, deep, all-absorbing rapture of a Christian experience she was enabled to say to her mother, that God was true in Christ as our Savior and her Redeemer.

The writer of this memorial cannot restrain, in this connection, the expression of gratitude that our country is so blest with those literary schools which become to the young, tender and earnest-hearted youth not only an accomplishment and preparation for life, but the nurseries of piety and the hope of heaven.

When Miss Lydie returned home, during the last vacation, she attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—the church of her parents. Unostentatious in all things, her Christian life flowed steadily and quietly on, until it bore her up to the source from whence it came. On the eve of her departure to Oxford again this true and earnest-hearted young Christian visited an aged and worthy mother, an exemplar of Christian faith, and asked her, as a favor, to unite daily with her in prayer to God for the convert in whom dearer to her than life. In one so happily blest by nature, with the sweet bonds of character, it would seem a loss to the friends of her life that the grace of God was not permitted to be such and happy exemplification in the social ministries of womanhood, but it only added in her death the wonderful and glorious power of the cross.

If her death was a grief and a sorrow long the shadow, it was no less a sunshine, that gilds serene with hope and consolation. In all her sickness she was "resigned, submissive, meek." And when near her last moments, the pangs of death were hushed to the raptures of celestial joy. In the hour when strong men have quailed, and tossed themselves in agony and despair, this young and attenuated child exclaims: "I am so happy." And, when unable to articulate her joy she would raise and clap her hands in the ecstasies of salvation. As there was no sham in her character, her life and her Christian experience, there could be no mock consolation in her dying hour. She passed away with an unclouded assurance of a rest with God.

It is fit and proper to put on record this genuineness of Christian experience and the realities of an endless salvation, that the young may read it with profit, and the aged find in it the consolations of faith.

O how troubled are the mysteries of such a death! To her bereaved parents may it be not only a deep joy, but a glorious and peaceful anticipation.

THE FANCIES OF YOUTH AND AGE.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

While yet my blood ran full and free,
Gay girls the Muses seemed to me,
Forever young, forever fair,
With laughing eyes that challenge care.

No hour when they would not be wooed;
If I was, they were in the mood;
We played at courtship all day long,
And cured our patnless griefs with song.

Too happy days! But, wiser now,
Three matrons, with unjoyful brow,
And eyes severe, that conquer mine,
I see replace those witches fine.

Their looks convict the unthrifty years,
Theirs are the rock, the thread, the shears,
Symbols, the artist's triple clew
To matter, form and measure due.

Each lays a finger on her lip
And signs: "Beware! the moments slip!"
How shall I hope the three to gain?
Together, triumph; singly, pain.

GUIDINGS OF PROVIDENCE.

USE OF THE BIBLE AND REASON IN THE STUDY OF PROVIDENCE.

The doctrine of a special providence is one in which every reflecting mind must feel a deep interest. Who, that has tred life's path at any considerable length, has not seen the need of a guide more knowing than himself? Questions of intense interest are constantly presented, which his ignorance of the future makes him tremble to decide. Whatever be a man's theory upon this subject, or even if he be without theory, he will often find himself in circumstances which will bring him to such a profound consciousness of his own weakness that he would gladly listen to the counsel from an humble fellow-man; and where, to recognize the presence of an unerring guide would relieve him from an intolerable load.

For all these perplexing questions the believer finds a satisfactory solution in the Bible doctrine of a special providence. Doubtless, in a very important sense, God's providential care is over all his creatures, myriads of whom are wickedly ignorant of his benefactions. But this is true of the good man in a peculiar sense. So minute is this that "all things," small and great, are made to "work together for good." "The very haire of your head," says Christ, "are all numbered."

But it is my purpose to speak not so much of providence in general, or of those special providence which often guard the saint, unconsciously to himself, as of that particular class of providences which appeal to a man as a moral agent, indicating his duty, and leaving him to choose or reject the divine directions. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy paths." "The good man's steps are ordered by the Lord." To passages of this class, that might be multiplied to almost any extent, may be added numberless instance of providential guidance; as Joseph's sojourn in Egypt, Isaac's method of procuring a companion, etc. Indeed, the history of every holy man, if written, would present a narrative of special providences.

But it may be asked: "Is not the Bible man's all-sufficient rule of faith and practice?" Certainly—though it would seem defective did it not embrace the doctrine in question. The Bible answers all the purposes for which it was written, giving man the great principles by which to be governed in all things. But to write a book sufficiently specific to answer all questions in which man is interested would be a moral impossibility—would fill the world with books. The expediency of this or that calling or profession—whether this or some other locality is best—whether it is proper to enter now upon this or that business transaction—together with an endless variety of similar questions, meet men at every turn, upon which the Bible is necessarily silent, only as it promises providential aid. The Bible is the foundation—so important that he who refuses to bow to its authority looks in vain for providential guidance. He will neither have eyes to see, nor a heart to follow it when given.

I am aware that some may sneeringly inquire: "If God has not endowed man with a sufficient amount of reason and common sense to guide him in these common affairs of life?" Whatever may have been the original strength of man's reasoning faculties, even if it was sufficient without either revelation or providence, obviously, with its present disabilities, the sphere is very limited in which it may be safely trusted. A man needs only a moment's reflection upon his past history to convince him of the correctness of this remark. How many miserable tilts has his own reason made, within what was deemed its own province! Doubtless reason would be much more trustworthy if always left to its own unbiased decisions. Its misfortune has been, since the fall, to be ever trammeled with bad associations. Pride, anger, selfishness and a host of kindred evils being the companions with which it ever sits in counsel on the gravest questions. It is true the case is different with the truly pious. Here reason's cabinet is changed. These evil propensities give place to the graces of the Holy Spirit. But reason thus enlightened becomes so conscious of its own weakness as to even cry out for providential aid. For surely it is a dictate of common sense, as well as of piety, to acknowledge one's weakness where so perfectly obvious, and nothing can be more unreasonable than to boast of power to perform impossibilities. Man cannot foretell the future, and yet he is constantly compelled to decide questions that must have an important bearing upon his future weal or woe. It is more the province of reason to discern than to devise man's pathway. Divinely illuminated, it may discern the path already marked; but beyond this it may not safely venture. "Trust in the Lord at all times, and lean not to thy own understanding," is heaven's own precept. And the same authority declares: "He that trusts in his own heart is a fool." Now he that will violate the divine command by trusting to his own understanding to plan his course, without asking for and following providential light, perverts the gift of reason, assumes the prerogative of God, and must sooner or later reap the reward of his temerity. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

"But why not, then, dispense with reason in these matters altogether, and be guided wholly by Providence?" This would be about as wise as for one with weak eyes to conclude that, because he finds spectacles indispensable helps to vision, his eyes are useless, and may be closed or plucked out! He that despises reason despises the gift of God. But he that trusts alone to reason makes it an idol, and must ultimately see his folly in relying upon it to steer his bark across life's dangerous sea. Providential helps are not offered to put out the eyes of reason, but to sharpen its perceptions, and enable man to use it to the best advantage. Reason is much more important to the man who avails himself of the benefits of revelation and providence than to him who rejects these. 1. It is enlightened and invigorated by grace, to discern clearly the path in which to tread. 2. It is assigned its proper place, and required to do no more than it is competent to perform. Whereas, where these other helps are rejected, reason is left in its most decrepit and enfeebled state, and then cruelly taxed, and of course it must fail to perform the task assigned it. God offers no needless helps; and, as reason, revelation and providence are all divine gifts, he that would tread life's path safely had better make the best possible use of them all.—Things New and Old, by E. Owen.

EGYPT AND ART.

In an article in the October number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, by Dr. J. P. Thompson, formerly of this city, we find the following interesting reference to Egyptian influence on art:

"The development of the arts in ancient Egypt, and the influence of Egyptian art upon later nations are discussed by Dr. Lepsius in two essays read before the Berlin Academy of Science, and now published as independent monographs. In the last edition of his History of Architecture Mr. Fergusson gives it as the result of his studies in comparative architecture that 'the Greeks borrowed nearly every peculiarity of their arts from the banks of the Nile. We possess tangible evidence of peristylar temples and proto-doric pillars, erected in Egypt centuries before the oldest known specimens in Greece. We need, therefore, hardly hesitate to award the palm of invention of these things to the Egyptians, as we should probably be forced to do of most of the arts and sciences of the Greeks if we had only knowledge sufficient to connect them. Taken altogether, we may perhaps safely assert that the Egyptians were the most essentially a building people of all those we are acquainted with, and the most generally successful in all they attempted in this way. The Greeks, it is true, surpass them in refinement and beauty of detail, and in the class of sculpture with which they ornamented their buildings, while the Gothic architects far excelled them in constructive cleverness; but, with these exceptions, no other styles can be put in competition with them. At the same time, neither Grecian nor Gothic architects understood more perfectly all the gradations of art, and the exact character that should be given to every form and every detail. Whether it was the plain, flat-sided pyramid, the crowded and massive hypostyle hall, the playful pavilion or the luxurious dwelling—in all these the Egyptian understood perfectly both how to make the general design express exactly what he wanted, and to make every detail and all the various materials contribute to the general effect. They understood also, better than any other nation, how to use sculpture in combination with architecture, and to make their colossi and avenues of sphinxes group themselves into parts of one great design, and at the same time to use historical paintings, fading, by insensible degrees, into hieroglyphics on the one hand, and into sculpture on the other; linking the whole together with the highest class of phonetic utterance. With the most brilliant coloring they thus harmonize all these arts into one great whole, unsurpassed by anything the world has seen during the thirty centuries of struggle and aspiration that have elapsed since the brilliant days of the great kingdom of Pharaohs.' These generalizations of Forgusson—in which he was partly anticipated by Julius Braun—are borne out by the details which Dr. Lepsius has given of the development of art-forms in Egypt, and the influence of these upon the growth of art in Greece. The artistic feeling in ancient Egyptian works shows itself, in the first instance, in the adaptation of material to conditions and ends. The country and its surroundings furnished varieties of stone, clay, wood, metals, precious stones, available for the purposes of art; and in their buildings, their monuments, their decorations, the Egyptians exhibit a nice sense of the relative uses and value of these crude materials—limestone, sandstone, syenite, granite, alabaster, serpentine, porphyry, each being employed in its turn, according to the demands of strength, durability or luxury. For purposes of luxury also the precious metals and precious stones were used, as appears not only from the mention of these in inscriptions, but from specimens to be seen in the collections of the Louvre, the Berlin and the British Museums. Gold, silver, electrum, lapis-lazuli, emerald, ruby, turquoise, topaz, often occur in the inscriptions, and the processes of working in them are delineated in pictures. Iron, copper and lead are named, but no hieroglyphic equivalents have been ascertained for tin, though mirrors and other articles of bronze are found to contain as high as fourteen per cent. of this metal. Neither is there any mention of zinc in the hieroglyphics. Gold and silver appear in the form of coins, rings, and dishes, plates, vessels of divers shapes, and are pictured also in the lump and in large masses, ready for the artificer. Electrum, a compound of gold and silver, was used for coins and rings. The lapis-lazuli was imitated in glass, in various shades of blue; as were also the emerald, malachite and other greens. Brilliancy of effect, which their climate favored, was studied by the Egyptians in their decorative arts, through variety and combination of colors.

"In the next place, even the rigid conventionalism which presides over all the monuments of ancient Egypt has its origin in a feeling kindred to that of the modern pre-Raphaelite school in painting—the desire to copy nature servilely in the minutest details, without idealizing or harmonizing for general effect; each particular member of the human body, for instance, being drawn independently of its relations to other members, the head in profile, the hand with its five fingers always visible, the two shoulders made to appear even when the legs were drawn in profile. But these peculiarities were transmitted to the earlier forms of Greek art, and may still be seen in coins, vases and bas-reliefs prior to the free and graceful handling of the human finger as a whole in sculpture. And, moreover, somewhat of the same conventionalism holds its place in modern art, and justifies itself upon artistic grounds, as in bas-reliefs, heraldic symbols and also upon the stage of the theater. But, with all their conventionalism of style, the Egyptians observed a canon of proportion, which is a third mark of their devotion to art as a study."

A NEGRO'S ARGUMENT.—An old negro named Pete was very much troubled about his sins. Perceiving him one day with a very downcast look, his master asked him the cause. "Oh! massa, I'm such a great sinner!" "But, Pete," said his master, "you are foolish to take it so much to heart. You never see me troubled about my sins." "I know de reason, massa," said Pete; "when you go out duck-shooting, and kill one duck and wound another, don't you run after de wounded duck?" "Yes, Pete;" and the master wondered what was coming next. "Well, massa, dat is de way wid you and me. De debil has got you sure; but, as he am not sure of me, he chases dis chile all de time."

VOLTAIRE used to say of the diminutive territory of Geneva: "When I shake my wig I cover the whole republic with powder."

THIRTY REASONS

WHY THE EARLY CONVERSION OF CHILDREN SHOULD ENGAGE THE ATTENTION OF EVERY TRUE CHRISTIAN.

1. Because children are sinners and may be lost.
2. Because Jesus Christ died for them, and they may be saved.
3. Because the simple plan of salvation through faith in Christ is the same for children as for grown-up people.
4. Because there is a special promise for the young: "Those that seek me early shall find me."
5. Because very many dear children have found the Savior, and are now happy in his love.
6. Because the Holy Spirit is striving in the hearts of many more.
7. Because it is constantly found that there are little ones who want to come to Jesus, but do not know the way.
8. Because they are not safe until they have come.
9. Because the child's heart is tender, and not yet hardened by a long course of sin.
10. Because the child receives the truth in more simple faith than the adult.
11. Because it is easy for children to love, and therefore they may be taught to love Jesus.
12. Because it is easy for children to trust, and so they may be led to trust in Jesus.
13. Because those converted in early life make the most earnest and consistent Christians.
14. Because those who spend their youthful days in learning in Christ's school will become the wisest Christians.
15. Because, having life before them, they are likely to be the most useful Christians.
16. Because we now have the children with us, and it is easy to get them to listen to the story of the cross.
17. Because when they grow up to be young men and women it will be very difficult to reach them.
18. Because thousands of children leave our Sabbath schools at thirteen or fourteen, and leave them unconverted.
19. Because it is a startling fact that these Sunday school scholars form nine-tenths of the criminals in our jails and the unfortunates on the streets.
20. Because we live in a fast age, when children rapidly learn the manners, and too often imitate the vices of grown-up people.
21. Because these children may become the fathers and mothers of the next generation.
22. Because they may die while they are still young.
23. Because the Lord may come, and none of them may ever grow up to be men and women.
24. Because children may be so readily gathered together in the school-room, the cottage or the drawing-room, in the open air, by the seashore.
25. Because a little book or tract given to a child will always be accepted and read, which is not always the case with grown people.
26. Because a letter written to a child is sure to be treasured up and read again and again.
27. Because a word can be spoken with freedom to a child, and all of us meet with children sometimes, and have many opportunities of individually pointing them to Jesus.
28. Because this work among the young does not want special gifts so much as earnestness and love to souls.
29. Because it is a work that brings us so near Christ.
30. Because the lambs are so dear to the heart of the Good Shepherd, who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—The Christian.

GOD'S SAINTS.

God has saints of several degrees, and some of them have more communion with him than others. From among the multitude he chose twelve to be with him; from among the twelve he chose three—Peter, James and John—who were the privy council; from among the three he chose out John as his bosom favorite, of whom it is said five times in St. John's gospel that he was the disciple whom Jesus loved. So now, at this day, God has his "babes," who live upon milk. He has his children also, who know their Father, and are assured of his love. Moreover, he has his "young men," who go out to war, and fight the Lord's battles victoriously, and he has "fathers" in Israel, who abound in gray-headed experience and wisdom; for they knew him from the beginning, and they remember his words. It is a great mercy to be one of God's "little ones," yea, the least of all; to be a star, though not of the first magnitude; to be a disciple, though not a John, not one of the three, nor one of the twelve, nor one of the seventy. It is a mercy to be new-born—to be taken into the family of God and household of faith. But to grow up to a perfect stature, to be a man in Christ Jesus—O how great a mercy!

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Methodists of the Chicago district are erecting churches to the value of $340,000, for which $100,000 of aid has been received from abroad.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE has a fund from which a prize of $500 will be given, once in two years, to the author of the best essay on the relations of Christians to the world.

THE five Conferences in Texas of the Methodist Episcopal Church South show an aggregate of 780 conversions for the month of September, and 944 accessions to the church.

THE National Camp Meeting Committee have resolved on four meetings for 1873, namely: at Landisville, Pennsylvania, Moundsville, West Virginia, Upper Iowa, and Knoxville, Tennessee.

THERE are fourteen foreign missions in charge of the American Baptist Union, having in all about 24,000 communicants. In addition to the hundred American laborers in these missions there are 500 native helpers, of whom about eighty are ordained ministers.

THE Committee of the Beecher Memorial reported, a few weeks ago, at the weekly prayer meeting of Plymouth Church. Their report was accepted, and after pertinent remarks by the pastor and the brethren, the sum of $50,000 was raised for the proposed Bethel and Navy Missions.

IT WAS RESOLVED at a meeting of the Society of Jesuits of Rome, over which Beckx, the head of the order, presided, to transfer the work of the society in Germany to laymen, who are to be organized under such names as "Society of United Brethren," "Association for Prayer," and "Alliance of Good Catholics."

THE number of native Christian communicants in North India has more than doubled since 1861. The total number of communicants reported is 13,908, with a Christian community of no less than 48,591 souls. The number of Protestant native Christians in India, Burmah and Ceylon is estimated at 300,000.

THE London Jewish Chronicle says: "A society of atheists has been formed at Venice. They recently sent an address of congratulation to King Victor Emanuel on the escape of his son and daughter-in-law from assassination. Oddly enough, forgetting they were atheists, they 'thanked Divine Providence for the miraculous escape,' etc."

BISHOP GRAY, of Capetown, died on the first of September. He was the founder of the South African Church just twenty-five years ago. Then there was one diocese and twenty clergy. Now there are five dioceses, each with a cathedral, 120 clergy, a diocesan college and schools, St. George's Home and Sisterhoods, and especially diocesan synods.

REV. DR. CUMMING, of London, has just completed the fortieth year of his ministry. Referring, on a recent occasion, to this circumstance, he stated that when he began his pastorate at Crown court, London, he had only a stipend of £200, but it increased with the remarkable success of his congregation, until it reached the "episcopal salary of £1,200."

JAPAN is rapidly adapting herself to Western civilization. The Department of Religion there has issued a document in favor of toleration to all religious creeds; they have, moreover, adopted the police system of the United States, and their first railroad was opened, on the fourteenth of October last, from Yeddo to Yokohama, the Emperor presiding over the ceremonies and passing over the road.

THE present Queen of Madagascar, in September, 1860, ordered the national idols to be burned, declaring her desire that the kingdom should rest on God. Before the close of the year, it is said, multitudes of the people had committed their idols and charms to the flames. At the close of the fiftieth year of the mission the communicants numbered 20,951, and the adherents to Christianity 231,759.

THE recent religious interest in Mexico, and the visit of Dr. Riley to Boston, with the stirring appeals from Dr. Butler, of the American and Foreign Christian Union, have led the trustees of the Boston University to provide instruction in Spanish, and an enthusiastic friend of the Protestant reform has offered a prize of $50 to the student making most efficiency in the class originated to furnish missionaries for the Mexican field.

DURING the past year the New York City Mission has been sustaining forty missionaries, men and women, who have made 100,000 visits among the poor and needy, and held 4,000 meetings of various kinds. The sick and aged and helpless, unnumbered by thousands, have received special care and attention. The necessary expenses of the mission are $5,000 per month, which comes from private applications to the benevolent. During the summer the collections have been light, and the treasury is largely overdrawn.

THE Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church have raised, within the past fifty years, $2,216,556.01 for domestic missionary work, and $2,245,280.01 for foreign missions—making a total for missions of all kinds of $4,461,836.82. Since 1866 the same board has expended on the Freedman's Commission $160,796.21; and in 1872, on the Indian Commission, the sum of $27,513.68. These latter two items are in addition to the total above.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Nouvelliste Vaudois wrote from Alexandria, on the ninth of September last, of an unexpected movement on the part of the members of the Catholic Armenian Church of that city, and one which cannot but possess a most important influence in the solution of religious questions in the East. It seems that for a long time the Armenian community there has been suffering from dissensions among its rulers, the highest committee of that ecclesiastical body being in bitter opposition to its civil officers. Weary of the warfare, on the first Sabbath of September a large number of the leading members of the community quietly assembled in the Scotch chapel for the purpose of deliberating on measures to be adopted for relief from the difficulties afflicting them. The American missionaries were invited to assist in this wholly spontaneous conference; and the result of the meeting is briefly stated to have been an unanimous vote on the part of the divided Armenians declaring themselves Protestants, without further form or process. We regard this result as a most cheering and significant action among Oriental Catholics, and hope that it may be followed by all who cannot allow the pretensions of Rome.

AT THE Seventh-Day Baptist General Conference, which met last month at Southampton, Illinois, about sixty churches were represented. The previous General Conference had appointed a committee to procure and publish a discussion on communion, for the information of the church, and to help settle the question of open or close communion. The committee reported substantial failure to secure their object. This year is the two hundredth anniversary of the institution of the denomination. The Conference reiterated a resolution that its experience and the fruits of its work had proved that it had a valid reason for its existence, and determined to raise a memorial fund of $100,000. Subscribers may devote their gifts to any appropriate objects of the church, but a centenary educational fund is recommended as the prominent object. The Tract Society of this denomination reports receipts to its general fund of $4,028.07. The educational interests are actively pushed. The institutions, Albion Academy, Wisconsin, Milton College, Wisconsin, and Alfred University, New York, are well supported; they have all good buildings and grounds, maintain a high standard of education, and are in moderately good, though not wealthy, financial condition. A theological department has been added to the Alfred University.

NO WORK of modern missions, especially in Roman Catholic lands, has surpassed in interest and hopefulness the progress of the truth in Mexico. But a few years since there was not a single Evangelical church in that republic; now there are scores. Then Presbyter Manual Aguas was the great preacher of the Roman cathedral at the capital; now he is the eloquent Protestant pastor of a large congregation in an immense church bought by American Christians in that same capital. Then Romanism controlled the political, civil, social and domestic relations of the people; now its power is broken, its prestige gone and its priesthood vainly struggling with the advancing wave of freedom. Aguas, the Gavazzi of Mexico, gives the following account of his conversion, in writing, to a New York gentleman who had contributed largely to the work in Mexico: "Allow me heartily to thank you for what you have done in our behalf. Part of your contribution for Mexico was converted into Christian pamphlets that were widely and effectively circulated here. One of these arrived at my sad dwelling, where I was despairingly suffering because I had not been able to find peace for my soul, finding myself, as I then did, in the darkness of Roman idolatry; but from the time that I read that Christian pamphlet—little esteemed by the worldly, but most precious to me as containing the divine truth—the Lord commenced to lead me little by little, in a manner at once sweet and powerful, without in the least wounding my free will, until he guided me into the glorious light of faith, where I find myself so happy, and where, in spite of my littleness, by the Lord's help, with the Bible in my hand, I have succeeded in making the Roman magnates in this capital tremble with dread and consternation."

THE UNKNOWN MEAT.

Christ had seemingly forgotten his weariness and hunger while talking with the woman at Jacob's well. New strength and vigor came as his soul became enlisted, more and more, for the salvation of the Samaritans. When the disciples came with meat he was too much absorbed with the field white to harvest. He was quickened, sustained and satisfied by his work. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." This was a meat that the disciples knew not of. They knew of the meat which was in their hand, and of that which they were often most careful and troubled to obtain. They might have had some notion of spiritual food, as consisting of doctrine, and divine virtue imparted by faith to those who hungered for righteousness. But this meat of doing God's will, of finishing the work which God had given them to do, was far in advance of any experience which they then had. We are not sure that they came to know it till long afterward, and certainly not until the Pentecostal Spirit came upon them, and they were lifted up to higher and heavenly conceptions of their calling.

Here was a zeal and an enthusiasm, a devotion to duty, and a supreme happiness in it, which fed and nourished the fainting body, and refreshed and cheered the weary spirit. It was all of life—the means and the end of it—and a source of power and comfort which raised its possessor above the ordinary weakness and dependence of the flesh. The privilege of doing was manna—real angels' food—the only meat which the celestial and glorified crave or enjoy. The opportunity of finishing the work by pressing in at the open door, and by thrusting in the sickle where the wheat stood white and thick, was a joy that thrilled. It is the happiness of duty, though its performance requires the sacrifice of ease and pleasure, and leads by thorny paths to the pain and shame of Calvary. It is the satisfaction of a completed mission, wherein there has been no aimless trifling, no waste of gifts, no living for puerile and ignoble ends, but a rounded and well-proportioned work brought to completion.

It is questionable whether even believers all know of this meat. To do and to enjoy are not always the same thing, and religious comfort, as an end, may be something different from the one absorbing desire to finish the appointed work. Here is a blessedness far above the common ends of even the believer's experience—a type of consecration and strength which towers almost beyond the sight of many who claim the discipleship of Jesus. To make this will the object of effort, and to do well and completely what that will directs, regarding nothing else, caring for nothing more, desiring nothing beside, and making it alone the sufficient and all-sustaining principle of the soul, does surpass the ordinary attainment. The Master stands upon a height, to which all are invited; but it is still too true of the most of us: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." While our ignorance is disclosed by this language, it also calls us to come up higher. There are different positions which men occupy with reference to duty and obligation. Some work with a slavish spirit and with a servile temper, while others work with a spirit of freedom and gladness. To one class it is a task most carefully performed, but under a "spirit of bondage to fear;" to another it is a privilege through which the Spirit of adoption, crying Abba Father, breathes continually. As believers we may already know in part of this meat; but to fully comprehend we must go up to the lofty eminence of a Savior's devotion, and with him be lost in the brightness and sublimity of divine love and communion.

Whatever may be the meat of others, this doing God's will and finishing his work should be ours. The world may come with its store of pleasures, its gain, its tempting delicacies, its ambitions and honors. These are not the meat of the Christ-like and the holy heart. They are dryer and more loathed than husks—empty and unsatisfying. The very desire for them is lost in the sweetness and relish of that spiritual food which a zealous devotion to God supplies. Little do the worldly and temporizing, the frivolous and sensual know of that continual feast which the consecrated spirit enjoys. This is a meat "ye know not of," for it is written, and ever true, of these higher realizations of spiritual things that "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The distance between Christ and those who said, "Master, eat," was inconceivably great. The great and heavenly soul feasting amidst outward destitution, and the sincere but as yet carnal disciples, unable to approach the secret of his strength and joy! So it is still—the unknown meat unknown to the most, but a perpetual banqueting to those who possess the mind that was in Christ. The life of faith to the unbelieving mind appears to be a dark and sterile waste, unrelieved by a single object of delight or pleasure; but "to them that love him" it abounds with living streams, with fadeless verdure, and with a light which suffers no eclipse.

AT THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

After the most of a night on the cars to Jackson, and the most of a day at Jackson, we reach the Brandon station after dark on a freight train, and then by a chance hack to Brandon, a mile or more, and seemingly up hill all the way. Our journey was a cold one—snow on the ground, and nipping north wind. Friday morning we found the Conference well under way—much business already done, and things moving on smoothly. The attendance of ministers pretty good; of laymen, not large, but among them some gentlemen of great competency in deliberation and in speech. In the personnel of the Conference there is a due mixture of venerable and experienced men, and a good number of promising young men. Strong and able-bodied for the most part, they look like working men, and equal to the severe toil to which they have devoted their lives. Bishop Kavanaugh has lost nothing physically or mentally since we last met him, and seems to maintain his wonted good nature amidst his responsible and trying duties and increasing years. His presence is a wholesome tonic, mentally, spiritually and physically, to those over whom he presides. Cheerful, instructive and eloquent, he is ever the embodiment of goodness and cheerfulness. On Friday night a meeting was held for the interest of ministerial education. Addresses were made by Revs. H. F. Johnson, C. G. Andrews and J. T. Heard, and a collection of nearly $1,000 was realized. The interest taken by this Conference in this cause augurs well for the future. It is an unmistakable sign of life and progress, and will bear fruit in time to come. This is our first sight of Brandon, and we have had as yet but little opportunity to look about. It sits upon a range of hills, and contains a number of spacious private homes. The courthouse, in which the Conference holds its session, is a commodious and well-built edifice; the Presbyterian church, which has been placed at the disposal of the Conference, is a neat and comfortable house, and the Episcopal church is handsome in appearance. The new Methodist church, built of brick, and very comely indeed, is rapidly approaching completion, but, contrary to expectation, could not be finished in time for the Conference occasion. Bro. Thompson, the pastor, has labored diligently, and in a few weeks his efforts will be crowned by the possession of one of the most beautiful churches in the interior of Mississippi. The population of the town is estimated at between fifteen hundred and two thousand. The epizootic is here and at Jackson, and throughout the country generally. We hear also some mention of hard times; but this is no new epidemic, but one of which preachers have been hearing and feeling all their lives. So far as we can judge at this time, the preachers have been but indifferently supported; the collections, however, are rather better than last year. As this closes Saturday, we can speak of the missionary anniversary, but not of the Sunday services, and of the completed action of the Conference on the various important interests which, as yet, have not come from the hands of the committees. On Saturday the examination of character was concluded. The reading of memoirs of ministers who have died was the order of the day at eleven o'clock. Carefully-prepared memoirs were read and adopted of Ransom J. Jones, Thomas Nixon and Leonidas R. Redding. Feeling and appropriate addresses were made by several members of the Conference. Thomas Nixon was seventy-nine at the time of his death, and had been a preacher for sixty years. Dr. Marshall's remarks upon his life and character were exceedingly happy and appropriate. The Conference has been considerably strengthened by transfers and admissions on trial. There is no manifested disposition to hurry the business, and the good Bishop's plan is always to hasten slowly. The Conference is well entertained by a most considerate and hospitable people, and, bating some little inconvenience in getting here, are generally pleased and gratified by their reception by the community.

The missionary anniversary was held on Saturday night. The treasurer, Dr. Watkins, reported the amount raised during the year for missions to be $1,650. The amount realized at the anniversary was about $250. Dr. Marshall opened the speaking with a mellow and affecting address, and was followed by Bishop Kavanaugh in one of his grand and full-orbed sermonic speeches. Rev. J. T. Heard took the collection. A very pleasant and profitable occasion.

PARSONAGES.

The importance of parsonages to our itinerant work is very great. To have them in the circuit or station is a considerable item secured in the preacher's support. Our ministry cannot be free and untrammeled without them. With a home to go to, almost any appointment may be risked, with a fair prospect of getting along somehow. If, however, a house has to be found and then furnished, the resources of the new pastor and the available means of the people are pretty well exhausted before the year begins. It is important that the parsonage be a good one—comfortable, cheerful and inviting. Better have none than to have a mere apology for one—a place where the family is doomed to discomfort and suffering, while the impression exists that they are well housed and well provided for.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, in an article on the subject of parsonages, tells some plain truths, and makes some statements which many of our readers will recognize as painfully life-like, and in accordance with their own experience and observation. From the Richmond's article we quote as follows:

With few exceptions our parsonages are very poor affairs. Generally they are uncomfortable, dilapidated, open houses. The fences are broken, patched with planks, slabs, old barrel staves, or anything that comes to hand and will suffice to stop a pig-hole. The inside of a parsonage usually agrees with the outside. Innocent of paint without, the house is innocent of paint within. Carpetless floors, rickety chairs, frayed, broken-spring sofas, or none at all, creaking old corded bedsteads, with scanty supplies of bed clothing, odds and ends of crockery in an old safe or cupboard, no cooking stove, but instead the most ancient styles of pots, skillets, spiders, frying pans, etc. These, and many other positive discomforts, make up the tout ensemble of most of our parsonages.

Has it never occurred to our people that other people judge of our estimate of our preachers by the houses we give them to live in? This is even so. "Who lives in that house?" "The Methodist circuit-rider lives there." "Ah, does he?" And the questioner is pretty sure to form an idea of what sort of a man he is, and what his people think of him, by the shabby, uninviting parsonage and its surroundings. The heart of many a good woman has sunk within her when she has entered and looked around at the house which is to be her home for a year, perhaps for four years. She has left the comforts of a genuine home to bear a part of the burden of the itinerancy, and, perhaps, on the very threshold of her life-work, she is thrust into one of those dreadfully chilling houses called parsonages. She may be a woman of spirit and piety, handy and thrifty, and may soon "fix up things," and make the old place wear a cheerful, home-like look; but the very fact that the church her husband comes to serve has thought no more of the comfort of his family than to thrust them into such a musty old den does not help to give her a lighter heart, a brighter face, and a more hopeful outlook on the future.

BISHOP McTYEIRE IN CALIFORNIA

We give below the greater part of the Bishop's closing communication to the Nashville Christian Advocate:

OCTOBER 27.—Sunday morning we entered the Bay of San Diego; were up to see it and the glorious sun rising. The bay lies southward, close along the seaside—the separating sand-bar seeming, at a little distance, in places, to be insecure. It is land-locked—the entrance resembling the wards of a key—and about three miles wide and twelve miles long. Seamen praise it for its security and capacity. No trees are anywhere to be seen. The old town, of which the mission was the nucleus, is situated at the head of the bay—mostly adobe—not convenient to anchorage—and decaying. The new town is four miles below, on the east shore, the site rising easily and gracefully into the crescent-shaped hills of the background. Everything is new. Mr. Horton purchased the land within the last decade for a few hundred dollars. He is represented to be a public-spirited and liberal, as well as fortunate man. His hotel, where we breakfasted, is of brick, creditable in its size, building and keeping to a town of more than three thousand inhabitants. A bank, churches, shops, stores, residences and two "dailies," one of which, the World, is certainly a live paper. Lots, 50x100, are selling at from $800 to $1,000 in good locations. Streets have been laid off, exhausting the letters in the alphabet. By the foresight of Bishop Keener, two lots were secured for our church a year ago, and if we had the whole city to select from now, two more suitable and valuable for our purpose could not be located. The clean hundred feet square stands on a corner, and waits our coming. When will our Missionary Board enable us to do what others have already done here?

As there is no house or organized society of ours, we divided out, and attended religious service at different churches, of which there are the Baptist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian, Northern Methodist and Protestant Episcopalian. The accounts brought from the first and third were encouraging. Bro. Parsons "reports" a sermon to two auditors very well, for a layman; Dr. S. reported, and I reported. So we each heard three sermons that morning—one in full and two in outline.

San Diego is to be the terminus of the transcontinental southern railroad—in which fact its greatness lies. It is in the latitude of Charleston, South Carolina. Some look for another San Francisco here. Since Mr. Tom Scott ("railroad king") visited the place last summer, and designated depots, real estate has risen a hundred per cent. The present susteuance of the town is a question. Where does its trade come from? How do the people live—off of one another? Here are stores, but who buys the dry goods? They impress a stranger as in the right place, only just a little too soon. Everything depends on the coming railroad; they are in position waiting for it; and though it is a thousand miles off, they seem to expect it hourly. Hence great keenness for trade in San Diego. If you stand a minute or two looking at a map on the wall, somebody tips your elbow, and offers to shew corner lots or vacant squares that are cheap and sure to pay, etc. I was thus employed, when a voice at my side said: "Colonel, help me get this brick out." Looking round, I saw a man with his head under his wing, fumbling in his side-coat pocket as if he was trying to draw a pistol or something. He looked up and apologized. "O, excuse me—thought it was Colonel F.; excuse me, sir." I had heard of a brick in the hat, but never before of a brick in the side-coat pocket; and, moved as much by curiosity as politeness, I replied: "You were mistaken in the man, sir; but if I can be of any service to you, allow me."

He held the mouth of his pocket open, and, thrusting my hand deep down, I felt something cold and heavy, and brought it up. It was the size of half a ginger-cake (old style,) and not very unlike it in color—a gold brick worth $800. He was mining thirty miles back in the mountains, and though he had no town lots to sell, he was seeking to dispose of shares of stock in a mine.

It can hardly be otherwise—San Diego Bay must be the site of a great city. Its harbor has no rival for five hundred miles above or below it. The Southern Pacific railroad will find its terminus in latitude thirty-two. Other lines of railroad are projected along the coast leading to San Francisco. One to San Bernardino is under contract. Our Southern States and people are greatly concerned in the general and local developments that are to follow along the paths of these lines of commerce and travel. Our church will have a great work to do; and other churches, I trust, will not be wanting in the zeal and labor which will be necessary even when all make their contribution. Arizona will be opened up, and New Mexico and northern and western Texas, and southern California, according to the rapid movement of this restless generation. Agricultural and mining districts will be occupied that are now deserts; villages and cities and influential centers of population will be established. May the church be on hand with the saving grace of the gospel! Are we ready, are we getting ready, for the opportunities and responsibilities that are to devolve largely upon us?

The duty of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in such a country, and so related to us, is evident. According to the labor and money expended, and the facilities heretofore enjoyed by us, no portion of our wide field has yielded better or promises more. We have an excellent membership and ministry; the character of the ministry raised up on the soil is significant; it is matter of gratulation I refer to those who, though not natives, have been converted and licensed to preach there, and they make up a respectable proportion of our local and traveling preachers. In all the elements of piety and progress, of intelligence and consecration and social influence, our Pacific ministry and membership will compare favorably with those of any Conference on the Atlantic side. Let us push forward the work on the Pacific coast. The church would act wisely in meeting the developments of the time, and its opportunities, by a larger outlay of men and means, for at least the next few years; where other missionary and aid societies have expended thousands, we have expended only hundreds, and yet our success in extending the kingdom of Christ, and planting a growing church in a growing State, compares well with the results achieved by those who have been most favored. Certain substantial elements clave to us that could not be appropriated by others, and they have been served by a self-sacrificing and faithful ministry. I have gone in and out among them with admiration of their spirit and labors, and their steadfastness, from the first day until now, and thank God on every remembrance of them.

PUBLIC FEELING now is apt to side with the persecuted, and our modern martyr is full as likely to be smothered with roses as with coals. —E. H. Chapin.

THOUGH it be but a poor little hive, it makes a great difference whether you are the queen or the working bee.—Author of "Unawares"

Second Day.

THURSDAY, Dec. 12, 1872.

Conference met, pursuant to adjournment, at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

Religious exercises by T. Y. Armstrong.

Minutes of yesterday read and approved.

On motion, calling the roll was dispensed with.

A. B. Stewart was appointed to take charge of the accounts from the Publishing House. An exhibit from the Publishing House at Nashville was read and referred to the Committee on Religious Literature.

On motion of J. T. Heard, the Conference gave Samuel Jones, a local deacon, a certificate of the restoration of his credentials, he having lost the same.

In compliance with a request from the Covington Quarterly Conference, the parchments of ordination of Jesse Lee were restored to him.

The first question, "Who are admitted on trial?" was taken up. John W. Ellison, C. C. Watkins, J. B. K. Smith, Jas. W. McLaurin, T. W. West and Edward Hicks were admitted.

2. "Who are continued on trial?" was taken up. W. C. Black, J. J. Smylie, H. W. Featherstun and J. W. Sandell were continued.

3. "Who are admitted into full connection?" was taken up. H. R. Singleton, J. B. Waldon, J. W. Hall, D. G. W. Ellis, George M. Gillmore and J. S. Parker were admitted.

4. "Who are the deacons of one year?" was taken up. J. M. Weems, L. Carley, G. W. Chatfield (elder,) U. B. Philips and Henry P. Bowen, passed.

5. "What local preachers are elected and ordained deacons?" was taken up. Edward Hicks, W. D. Longmeier, John W. Henry, A. B. Ward and James Franklin were elected.

6. "What local deacons are elected and ordained elders?" was taken up. Pending this question the session of Confsrence was prolonged until the qnestion was disposed of.

Then, after some discussion, the Conference adjourned with the benediction.

J. W. Lambuth, missionary to China, character examined and passed.

A resolution was offered and passed thanking Colonel Frantz for favors in printing blanks.

Conference adjourned with the benedictien by the Bishop.

EVANGELIZING IN THE SWAMP.

IBERIA PARISH, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Having a few scattered sheep on Grand river, I have just spent six days among them and in the regions adjacent. I was prompted to this by feeling it a duty, ay, a privilege, to visit and "hold forth the word of life from house to houss," in out-of-the-way places, to those who, by residence, are deprivsd of the privileges and means of grace connected with the church. Through the kindness of Bro. Talley, who was received into the old Poydras Street chnrch hy the lamented and revered Elijah Steelo, I was met at the water's edge, fourteen miles distant, by a couple of young men who were good oarsmen, and by them conveyed in a skiff through sundry bayous, lakes, shoots, etc. (some of them with hard names,) about twenty miles, to Bro. Talley's, where late in the night I fonnd a cordial welcome. After deliberating with my host we concluded to spend the time itinerating through this great archipelago—go to every point of the compass, and visit as many families as possible after the apostolic method.

There is no little comfort in "going into the regions beyond," feeling the missionary spirit—a pioneer. Bro. J. F. Wynn, one of our devoted itinerants, occupied a large part of this vast and sparsely-settled swamp at the breaking out of the war, and it is gratefnl to know that, notwithstanding the devastation of war and successive overflows, there are those who cherish for him a fond remembrance. My line of travel, however, was very little in his wake.

My faithful swamp brother and pilot is acquainted with all the streams and bodies of water in the country. Under his tutelage I soon became an adept in paddling a pirogue, and many an aqueous mile did our little bark move fleetly over shoals and deep waters—the while dwelling upon the doctriues, peculiarities and hlest experience of our people, until the very dreariness and lonelincss of the country seemed not too great, hut possessed a charm. Imagine as desolate and solitary a country as your eyes ever beheld, relieved only by the fleet-swimming alligator at a distance, resembling a log, or sitting and eyeing us with all the curiosity of a philosopher as we pass within a few yards of him; the running and barking of the squirrel on the adjacent bank, and you have a good idea of that country. I saw but one horse while over there, the piregue and skiff filling his place.

The tour is fraught with incidents rich and rare, even to an old itinerant of eighteen years. Learning there was an old man on the way very sick, we called. I announced myself to the gentleman who met us at the water's edge. "Glad to see you, sir, at this time; come in." On entering the sick man's room I beheld an emaciated form, told him I was a minister of the gospel and called to see him, and hoped I could do something for him. He told me he was a Catholic. "All right; glad to know you have some religious belief. Jesus Christ, the sinner's Savior, is the great fact of the gospel upon which all Christians agree." "Do you wish to change my religion?" said he. "By no means," I replied. "I would only strengthen your faith in Jesus, as you seem near eternity. Would you like to have me pray for you?" Referring the matter to his son, who had come out from the Teche to see and nurse him, he answered: "If you please, if it will be to the glory of God. What will you charge me?" "Charge you!" extending my right hand; "you can cut off my right hand rather than I should charge you for my prayers and religious counsel." As we bowed in prayer the old man seemed mightily engaged to the close. We arose and sang a few verses of "Alas, and did my Savior bleed?"

On my return to that place I learned the son started with him out to the priest and church; a heavy shower of rain fell; he got one day's journey, and there he died.

Another incident: We called at a honse to baptize some children. The parents were nndecided as to the name of the infant. The mother wished it to bear the name of a deceased infant, and referred the case to me. "Certainly, if that is your preference. I have no snperstition about such things." It was growing late in the evening; we had twelve miles to paddle; my old friend said: "Let me snggest," etc. The child was baptized Thomas White. May Heaven bless that child!

Another incident: We came up suddenly around a point and to a steep bank, where stood a venerable live-oak, wearing waving moss, hanging in graceful negligence as the board of a veteran father, in front of a house that seemed to have been the residence of the proprietor of a sugar plantation, as we perceived by the immense brick chimneys. As we approached we heard voices as of mirth, when suddenly we espied the rolicking throng. The neighbors, to the number of say fifteen or twenty, had met to congratulate three of the party who had heen elected to parochial offices. Judging from the size of the jug, and that it was passed around as long as a drop remained (the preacher was invited to drink, but kindly refused,) and the exceeding garrulity of the crowd, we snppose they had imbibed freely. Our reception among them was courteous and kind, and they all united in saying a preacher was what they most needed; hut a preacher at that moment was what they least expected. I was told that this was an nnusual thing, and just happened so. It offered a good opportunity for me to circulate an appointmsnt to preach the next day to a congregation of about thirty, and I disconrsed on the snbject of Paul's great sermon to Felix: "As he reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, Felix trembled." And there was trembling there that day. Tell Bros. Pipes and Parvin I heartily indorse their views on temperance. Let us be decided and outspoken.

I preached three times, at different places, to from twenty to thirty people. I enjoyed the preaching myself, and they enjoyed it hugely. And as they "were as sheep without a shepherd," and feeling that my commission extended even to them, I "discipled" fifteen souls by receiving eight adults into the chnroh, some of whom had heen haptized, and seven children brought into covenant relationship with God. The weather turned fnriously cold upon me far away from home—and such a route! Got home on Saturday evening, filled my pulpit on Sabbath, helieving I had done one of the best week's work of my pastorate in this charge. To God he all the glory and praise of our salvation!

NEW IBERIA, LA., Nov. 18, 1872.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MINISTERS.

Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, declare it; if not, hold your peace. Have short prefaces, and introductions. Say your best things first and stop before you get prosy. Do not spoil the appetite for dinner by too much thin soup. Leave yourself out of the pulpit, and take Jesus in. Defend the gospel, and let the Lord defend you and your character.

Do not get excited too soon. Do not run away from your hearers. Engine driving wheels whirl fast on an icy track, but when they draw anything they go slower. It takes a cold hammer to bend hot iron. Heat up the people, but keep the hammer wet and cool. Do not bawl and scream. Too much water stops mill wheels, and too much noise drowns sense. Empty vessels ring the loudest. Powder is not shot. Thunder is harmless; lightning kills.

If you have lightning you can afford to thunder. Do not scold the people. Do not abuse the faithful souls who come to meeting on rainy days, because others are too lazy to attend. Preach the best to the smallest assemblies. Jesus preached to one woman at the well, and she got all Samaria out to hear him next time.

Do not repeat sentences, saying, "As I said before;" if you said it before, say something else after. Do not end sentences, passages of Scriptnre or quotations with "and so forth;" say what yon mean and stop. Leave out all words you cannot define. Stop preaching and talk to folks. Come down from your stilted ways and sacred tones, and become as a "little child." Tell storiss; Jesus did, and the common people heard him gladly. Relate your experience; Paul did, and yon can hardly do better than he. One fact that you have seen or felt is worth a bushel of moldy ideas dug out of moldier books. Change the subject if it goes hard. Do not preach till the middle of your sermon buries the beginning, and is buried by the end. Beware of long prayers, except in your closet. When weariness hegins, devotion ends. Look people in the face, and live so yon are not ashamed of them.

It is easier to run a saw-mill with a full pond than an empty one. Be moderate at first. Hoist the gate a little way; when you are half way throngh, raise it more; when yon are nearly done, put on the full head of water. Aim at the mark; hit it! Stop and look where the shot struck, then fire another broadside. Pack your sermons. Make your words like hullets. A board hurts a man most when it strikes edgewise. Make your discourse proportionate. If it is deep and strong, the stream may run longer. Do not think every brook is deep because you cannot see the bottom of it, nor call a man a deep diver because he always brings up mud.

Ventilate your meeting room. Sleeping in church is due to bad air oftener than bad manners.

If you are lied about, thank the devil for putting you on your guard, and take care that the story shall never come true. Do not grumble about your pay. If you want more money, go to work and earn it.—Western Christian Advocate.

ARTIFICIAL CLOUDS.

Solomon says: "He that regardeth the clouds shall not reap," but the reapers on the Rhone have lately been studying the clouds to some purpose; they have succeeded in manufacturing them to order. Successful experiments, according to the Lyons Progres, have been undertaken by the Vine Dressers' Congress for the production of artificial clouds. Tin receivers, filled with a peculiarly-prepared tar, were disposed over an area of many acres, and when the tar was ignited thick white clouds rose into the atmosphere, and, spreading out evenly over a large region, remained suspended several yards above the soil. The reader will at once understand the object and the use of this device. In seasons when frost is feared the tar-clouds would interpose between the crops and the sky, thus checking the night radiation which often causes such ravagos in vineyards and gardens, both in spring and harvest-time. This experiment of the French husbandmen is therefore something more than a enrious scientific feat—it is a valuable agricultural contrivance, all the more useful from the simplicity and cheapness of the machinery, a few dollars' worth of tar being ample provision for a season until the dangers of frost are past, or till the crops can no longer be injured. This device for clothing the fields with a protecing robe of vapor, taken together with the well-known process of cannonading the clouds to make them "tell their beads in drops of rain," shows how the modern farmer may shape the elements to his purposes, and rob even cloud-compelling Zeus of his fabled attributes.—Lippincott's Magazine.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND.—This pectoral balm, from its very ingredients, is an effective remedy in cases of coughs, colds and the general ailments resulting from bronchial affections. Soothing the cough, it both superinduces and facilitates expectoration, and in asthmatic cases has worked wonderful cures. This preparation is for sale by the well-known chemist, Mr. B. Laplace, of Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street.

TRADE seems to center at the store of Captain B. T. Walshe, No. 110 Canal street; but this is not at all strange, as he has a very complete stock of boys' and children's clothing, his "own make" shirts, underclothing, dressing robes and fancy articles, suitable for Christmas presents, and all reasonable in price.

MESSRS. DANNER & TOOMER, No. 288 Delord street, are prepared to supply any demand for lumber, shingles, oak staves and all kinds of building materials. We recommend them to our friends.

WE INVITE the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Ed. L. Zell & Co., corner of Canal and Carondelet streets, commission merchants, and importers of Havana cigars and produce.

T. W. BOTHICK, undertaker, one of our oldest and most reliable citizens, whose card will be seen elsewhere, attends personally to funerals. We bespeak for him a liberal patronage.

OUR LADY READERS will observe the advertisement of J. G. Bermel, No. 121 Canal street, where they will find a complete assortment of fancy articles and human hair goods.

THE amount of patronage received by Navra & Offner, No. 174 Canal street, is a proof that their efforts have been appreciated.

JOB PRINTING.—For job printing see the card of the Lightning General Mercantile Job-Printing Office, No. 2 Tchoupitoulas street.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by PRICE'S CELEBRATED AROMATIC STOMACH BITTERS is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositories, but the cases actually relieved by PRICE'S BITTERS will live—

"Within the book and volume of the brain,
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that did him his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such, indeed, is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters—no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh, prolific fields that heaven saws for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic and a cheering stimulant, it falls with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

THE BITTER AND THE SWEET.

Come, darling Effie,
Come, take the cup;
Effie must drink it all—
Drink it all up.

Darling, I know it is
Bitter and bad;
But 'twill make Effie dear
Rosy and glad.

Mother would take it all;
For her wee elf;
But who would suffer then?
Effie herself.

If Effie drinks it,
Then, I can tell,
She will go out to play
Merry and well.

Drink; and then, darling,
You shall have this—
Sweet after bitter,
Now, first, a kiss.

Ah! darling Effie,
God also knows,
When cups of bitterness
His hand bestows,

How his poor children need
Urging to take
Merciful draughts of pain
Mixed for their sake.

He too gives tenderly,
Joy after pain;
Sweet after bitterness;
After loss, gain.

People Who Never Go to School.

A STORY FOR SMALL BOYS.

"I wish I never had to go to school another day!" exclaimed Harry Dean impatiently, while hunting around the sitting-room to find his school books one morning.

"You needn't go to school if you don't want to, my son," said Mr. Dean, quietly laying down his newspaper.

Harry looked astounded for a moment, and then burst out:

"Oh! needn't I? Won't that be jolly? What times I'll have!" And off he bounded, with a shout, to tell Nellie that he was never going to school any more.

"Well, you may be a dunce, then, if you like," said Nellie; "for my part, I prefer to know something;" and she walked off with dignity.

Mr. Dean was a peculiar man. He had a way of letting his children learn by their own experience, and did not so much govern them as teach them to govern themselves.

Harry had a grand time that morning—at least he persuaded himself that he did—though he had to admit that playing alone was not so nice as having some one to play with.

After dinner Mr. Dean asked him if he'd like to ride that afternoon.

"I want to show you some people who never go to school, but spend their lives 'having a good time,' as you boys say. If you are to spend your life so, of course such people are those you will like best and live with."

"What sort of people are they, father?" asked Harry with interest.

"Oh, you'll see!" was the reply, as they went out to the buggy.

They rode through very pleasant woods and over charming, rolling prairie for about ten miles, when Harry was surprised to see his father drive up to a tree and prepare to tie his horse.

"Why do you stop here, father?" he asked.

"Just in that grove are the people we came to see," answered Mr. Dean.

Harry looked more closely and saw three or four wigwams.

"Oh, Indians!"

"Yes," answered his father; "Indians are the only people I know of who never go to school, even when they have a chance, and that is the life you have chosen."

The horse was now tied and they drew nearer. There were several wigwams, built of broad pieces of bark laid against poles stuck in the ground. The poles came together at the top, and a hole was left for a chimney. Out of each one came a thin smoke—which was a sign that it was near supper-time.

Mr. Dean went up to a door and told Harry to look in.

In the middle of the hut was a fire, and over it hung a black kettle, with some horrible-smelling stuff boiling in it. A dirty and utterly disgusting squaw was attending to the kettle and driving out dogs and children alternately. She didn't look much like the dainty Indian maiden you have seen in pictures, with pleasant face and graceful, fringed wrappings.

Far from it. An old, horrid calico jacket and cloth petticoat were her clothes, and a blanket lay there to be put over her when she had finished her work.

The men outside were lounging around, each wrapped in a blanket. Some were smoking, but most of them were not even doing that. Sitting or lying around, they seemed like so many dogs. They paid no attention to the visitors, so they walked around at their leisure.

When the meal was ready they had the pleasure of seeing how they took it. The squaw merely took the kettle off the fire and placed it on the ground. The family squatted around it, each putting his hand into the dish, and each seeming to try and see how fast he could stuff himself.

"You see the women have a tolerable easy time of it, Harry," said Mr. Dean. "No dishes to wash; only when nothing remains in the pot but bones, to stand it out for the dogs to lick, and then it is ready for the next meal."

"But what makes it smell so horrid in the wigwam?" asked Harry.

"Partly the oil in which they cook their meat. By the way, wouldn't you like to taste it?" and Mr. Dean started to go in, but Harry took his arm.

"Oh, no, father—please, don't! I should choke!"

Mr. Dean smiled.

"The smell comes partly from that, partly from the dried fish hanging on the walls, and partly from the Indians themselves."

"Well, I'm sure I never want to put my head in again," said Harry.

"It isn't very pleasant. Let us go and look at those papooses."

Sure enough, hanging from a low tree near by were two or three poor little Indian babies.

Do you know how they take care of Indian babies? They take a board a little longer than the poor little thing, lay the baby on it, and wind lots of cloth around the whole. The poor little thing is all bound up, clear to its chin; arms and legs all tied up; and there it stays all day, looking around, but never crying. Sometimes it hangs on a tree or bush, sometimes it stands against a rock, and sometimes hangs on the mother's back, with its droll little head and sharp black eyes peering out upon the world.

Harry looked at and pitied the babies, but soon turned to some boys who were amusing themselves with bows and arrows. Mr. Dean, to try their skill, threw some pennies up in the air, and they shot at them, never failing to hit the penny.

But now Mr. Dean said they must go, and soon they were on their homeward way.

"Father," said Harry, "what do you suppose they had in that kettle to eat?"

"Boiled dog, perhaps," said Mr. Dean. "They don't object to anything. Last winter, when their stock of food got low, they went to Mr. Brown's when he killed pigs, and devoured all parts of the animals that he had thrown away."

"Ugh!" said Harry.

"It wasn't very nice, but it was nothing to what they will do. Their ways are disgusting beyond words. They won't learn to talk English; they won't adopt any improvements in living; they prefer to live as they do, no better than brutes. In the summer the men hunt and fish all the time to get food enough to last in the winter, yet no one of them could be persuaded to raise a pig or calf for food. If they have plenty to eat, and not much trouble to get it, they are contented."

"They ain't much like the Indians I read about in 'Deerslayer,' father."

"No; not more than they are like the unusual pictures we see of them. However, people who prefer to remain ignorant, and never go to school, are always low and degraded, and get worse as they get older."

Harry blushed a little, but Mr. Dean went on:

"Being ignorant, they are of course superstitious; they believe in signs and omens, in witches and evil eyes. They spend most of their time in the long winter in telling horrible stories of ghosts or ogres or other fearful things, or else in bragging of their great deeds—though I guess these are few now-a-days—and displaying their string of scalps. They have no higher delight than to torture any one so unfortunate as to be their prisoner. In fact, they are cruel and treacherous to the last degree."

Mr. Dean said no more about the lesson he intended to give Harry, but noticed that the next morning he was the first one ready for school.

"Why, Harry," said Nellie, "you going to school? I thought you weren't going any more!"

"Well, I've changed my mind," said Harry quietly. "Can't a fellow change his mind?"

"It seems he can," said Nellio, as they went out the door.—Christian Advocate.

Do It In Time.

Only two or three inches—that was all. If the switchman had moved the track only that little distance all would have been right. But he forgot; and the train that was passing the station ran furiously into the heavy freight cars, and dashed itself to pieces!

"What was the cause?" everybody asked when the news of the great accident spread about town.

"Oh! a switch was out of its place," was the answer. "The switchman was careless; perhaps he was drunk."

How true it is, as Solomon said: "There is a time for everything." If we do not attend to it at the right time it is just as bad as if we did not do it at all."

Did you ever see a boy putting cards on a little steam printing press? He has to put each one in a certain place at a certain time, but if he does not attend, and do it just when the time comes, the press works on and no card is printed.—Apples of Gold.

Housekeepers' Department.

WATER COOKIES.—Three cups of sugar, one of water, one egg, one cup of butter, half a teaspoon soda, half a nutmeg grated. These are best when three weeks old.

TEA CAKE.—Two eggs, one cup of white sugar, one and one half cups of flour, one-half cup of cream, half a teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Beat the sugar, eggs and a pinch of salt together.

MOCK OYSTER FRITTERS.—Mix a pint of grated corn with three spoonfuls of milk, one teacupful of flour, half a teacupful of melted butter, a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of pepper and one beaten egg. Drop into a hot, well-greased griddle and fry brown.

USE OF GERANIUM LEAVES.—It is not generally known that the leaves of a geranium are an excellent application for cuts, where the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of that kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied to the part, and the wound will be cicatrized in a short time.

SALAD DRESSING.—(It is also excellent over sliced tomatoes.) Take the yolk of one fresh egg and mix with it two tablespoonfuls of olive oil very slowly, add one and one-half spoonfuls of mustard, three spoonfuls of salt, a little pepper, and, last of all, two spoonfuls of vinegar. Beat the white of the egg to a stiff froth and lightly stir in.

DELICATE PUDDING.—One quart of milk; while boiling stir in one pint of flour, after it is sifted, six eggs, six tablespoonfuls of butter, the grated peel and juice of two lemons. All the ingredients must be well beaten together before they are stirred into the milk; stir one way without stopping till it has boiled for a minute or two; take it off and turn into your pudding dish. It is to be eaten cold, with sugar and cream if you like.

The Farm and Garden.

Preserving Meats, Fish, and the Manufacture of Meat Extracts.

The preservation of meats and other animal substances for food has been in many processes attended with a loss of more or less of the nutritious substances contained therein. The processes hitherto devised have involved one or more of the following principles, viz.: the use of antiseptic salts and other antiseptic substances, the total exclusion of air, the oxygen in which tends to produce decay, the drying of the substances to be preserved (moisture being essential to rapid decomposition,) and, finally, the extraction of such parts as are soluble, and their subsequent concentration into thick sirups or jellies, by which the water is so far removed as to insure the keeping of the extracts during a reasonable period of time.

Familiar examples of the use of antiseptic substances are the employment of common salt in pickling meats, and the consuming action of creosote absorbed from smoke in smoking meats. Examples of the second category of preserving agencies are the use of hermetically-sealed cans, the surrounding of the substance to be kept by carbonic acid gas, etc.

In the third category, the "jerked beef" of the American Indians and the Mexicans stands as a prominent example.

Of the fourth category, the various extracts of meat, of which Baron Liebig's (lately much criticised) has led the market, will be at once recalled by our readers.

Various new processes are being constantly brought out, invention in this field being greatly stimulated by the high prices of fresh meats in nearly all the large cities, both in this country and in Europe. Among the most recent is one by Mr. Thomas Frederick Henley, of Pimlico, England, which seems a simple and practical method. The meat is first pressed in a raw state, or heated during the pressing, or the pressure may be applied only after the substances have been subjected to preliminary heating. According to one mode of operating under what may be termed the cold-pressure process, the substance to be desiccated (say raw beef or mutton) is cut into small pieces and placed on press-cloths in a stratum of from half an inch to one inch in thickness. The press-cloths having been previously placed on a light frame or former, the object of which is to regulate the size and thickness of the pressed cake, the press-cloth is folded over, the frame removed, and the cake placed in the press, each cake alternating with an iron plate until the press is charged.

The pumps are now put in motion (where a hydraulic press is the agent,) and the pressure gradually increased to about one hundred and forty-four pounds on the square inch. The time employed in squeezing out the juices of the meat is about fifteen minutes, and the amount of liquid discharged should be about twenty-five per cent., or one-fourth of the gross weight of the meat under treatment.

The fluid portions or juices of the meat, as they run off from the press, are conducted into a vessel, where they are subsequently mixed with an edible antiseptic. The pressed cakes or slabs are removed from the press and rubbed with dry salt, then cut up and packed in suitable packages.

When employing heat and pressure combined, the substances are placed in the raw state on the press-cloths and frames in the same manner as in the cold process; but in lieu of the ordinary press-plates, hot plates heated to a temperature of from two hundred and fifty to three hundred degrees Fahrenheit are used, by which means the albuminoid elements are fixed within the meat, which is, in fact, cooked and desiccated at the same time.

Suitable condiments are added to the meat before placing it in the press, and, the pressure having been applied and sustained as described with reference to the cold-pressure process, an excellent savory meat biscuit, well adapted for troops on the march and for naval stores, is produced. This process, being both rapid and economical, is applicable in many countries where meat is abundant and cheap, and where the climate necessitates the immediate employment of preserving agencies.—American Artisan.

LIME IN CROPS.—There is said to be carried off from the soil nine pounds of lime in twenty-five bushels of wheat, nine pounds in fifty bushels of oats, and fifteen pounds in thirty-eight bushels of barley. There are thirty-five pounds of lime in two tons of rye grass, one hundred and twenty-six pounds in two tons of clover, one hundred and forty pounds in twenty-five tons of turnips, and two hundred and seventy pounds in nine tons of potatoes. Some soils contain abundance of lime for a thousand years, while other soils require an occasional application of lime as a fertilizer.

THE EFFECT OF ROOT-PRUNING.—An exchange says: "Mr. A. O. Winchester, of St. Joseph, Michigan, had ten Northern Spy apple trees, thirteen years old, which had never blossomed or borne a crop. He directed his man to root-prune one tree and half root-prune another. This year the tree which was root pruned all around is full of blossoms, while that side of the half root-pruned alone is full of blossoms, the unroot-pruned side having none at all. Every other Northern Spy apple tree, as usual, contains no blossoms."

PEELING FRUIT TREES.—A writer in the Country Gentleman relates two instances that came under his notice where unproductive fruit trees were made to bear fair crops by having the bark carefully peeled from a portion of the trunk. It is a "kill or cure" remedy, but usually has been successful. It should be done not later than June.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. To Whom It May Concern.

THERE ARE IN THE STATE OF TEXAS thousands of acres of Land belonging to unknown heirs of parties who went to that State at an early date, bought or located lands, and have since died, owning them. Being in possession of facts in reference to original titles of lands, that have made many wealthy who were unaware they owned a dollar in that State, we invite all parties who had relatives who emigrated there, and have since died, to open a correspondence in reference thereto. We make no charge unless successful, and, if good titles are found, expect an interest for looking them up and removing clouds from titles, etc. Parties interested will do well to address

WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE!

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

MEDICAL.

THE GREAT
HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

As an Invigorator, Liver Corrector and Blood Renovator is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use. It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excessive overtaxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is permanent and lasting.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

POPE'S CURE FOR
Coughs, Colds, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs.

This preparation was introduced many years ago, after consulting the views of several of the most prominent physicians of New Orleans regarding its formula. The late Dr. Edward Jenner Coxe, author of the work on Inhalations for Diseases of Respiratory Organs, was pleased to say: "In my opinion, no better combination for the purpose of relieving the ordinary coughs and colds which prevail can readily be thought of." And nearly twenty years of actual trial has gone far to verify his remark. In bottles, 75 cents each. Try it. JOHN H. POPE, Druggist,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been cloudy and mild. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton.

The river is 14 feet 11 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ... bales..	13,647
Lake ...	97
Arkansas ...	1,493
Mobile ...	5,126
Tennessee ...	735
Texas ...	701
Total ...	20,060

On Saturday, operations being restricted by moderate supplies, the movement exhibited only a moderate degree of animation, but the sales, nevertheless, summed up 6,200 bales at steady prices for clean, even-running lots of fair staple, but rather easier prices, at least during the morning, for other descriptions. In some cases offers were accepted ¼c. under Friday's quotations, but factors subsequently exhibited more firmness, and the closing rates showed no quotable variation. On Monday buyers came forward with still more spirit, and although the movement was checked by the supply being only moderate and factors more stringent in their pretensions, yet 9,700 bales changed hands at a further improvement of ⅛@¼c. in ordinary, good ordinary and low middling, and about ¼c. in the higher grades. The market, however, exhibited some irregularity, and a part of the business was at Saturday's prices, the subsequent advance being stimulated by favorable dispatches from New York and increased competition among buyers. On Tuesday the market opened with a good inquiry, and, the supply being moderate, factors materially raised their pretensions, which checked operations, but a fair business was, nevertheless, done during the morning at an irregular advance of ⅛, ¼@⅜c. Later in the day, under an advance of ½c. at New York and ¼d. at Liverpool, with a brisk demand with advancing prices at Havre, the advantage was still more on the side of factors, the closing rates showing a net improvement of ¼@⅜c. in ordinary and good ordinary, ½c. in low middling, and about ¼c. in the higher grades. The sales summed up 6,700 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 411,892 bales, against 340,358 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 271,051 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 38,290 to Great Britain, and an increase of 36,166 to France, and of 113,494 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—On Tuesday the receipts comprised 700 hhds. About 800 hhds. were sold, including some from previous supplies, at 5¼@6¼c. for inferior, 6¾@7¼c. for common to good common, 7⅝@8c. for fair, 8¼@8⅜c. for good fair, 8½@8¾c. for fully fair, 9c. for prime, 9¼@9½c. for strictly prime, 9¾c. for choice, 7¾@9¼c. for seconds, 9¾@10¾c. for yellow clarified, and 10¾@11⅝c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The demand has been active at full prices, and the receipts on Saturday and Monday, embracing 8,000 bbls., were nearly all sold at 35@40c. for fair centrifugal, 45, 47@50c. for prime centrifugal, 45c. for common, 48@50c. for fair, 51@53c. for prime, 54@55c. for strictly prime, and 56c. for choice. Some half bbls. prime sold at 58c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—The sales on Saturday were confined to 200 sacks white at 80c., an advance of 10c. over previous figures. On Monday there were some small arrivals, and prices ruled 5c. ₱ bushel higher under a good inquiry, when 1,700 sacks were sold, embracing nearly all the receipts, at 85c. ₱ bushel for white and yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday, owing to the slow landing of receipts, the movement was restricted to 100 sacks St. Louis at 47c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the demand was moderate, but at steady prices, and 350 sacks were sold, comprising 300 from warehouse, at $1.25, and 50 on the landing at $1.30 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday 80 bbls. new mess sold, in three lots on the spot, at $13.75, and 170 bbls. do., to arrive, at $13.62½ ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $14@14.25 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Saturday 20 casks shoulders sold at 5⅝c. ₱ lb. On Monday 198 casks sold, in lots, at 9½@9¾c. for clear rib sides, and 11c. ₱ lb. for clear sides. Shoulders were quoted at 5¾c.

HAMS.—On Monday 20 tierces sold at 17½c., and 10 do. at 18c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 22 tierces sold, to arrive, at 17¾c., and 25 do., on the spot, at 18c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 100 tierces packers' sold, in two lots, at 8¾c., and 35 tierces refined at 8⅞c. ₱ lb., and 50 kegs refined at 9¾c.

BREAKFAST BACON.—On Tuesday 25 boxes Western sold at 10¼c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 112⅛@112¾ (against 112¼ at New York,) and closed at 111⅞@112⅛ (against 112 at New York.)

In silver we have noticed only retail sales. American half dollars are now quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at par to 2½ ₱ cent. premium in gold.

AND ALSO TO THE

GREAT ADVANTAGES

we possess over others in the same line of business.

In the first place, the EXPENSES incident to our business are not ONE-FOURTH as much as OUR LOCALITY as in the CENTER OF THE CITY.

In the second place, WE BUY FOR CASH and SELL FOR CASH, thus making no BAD DEBTS and always having FUNDS ON HAND to BUY BARGAINS with.

In the third place, we were SINGULARLY FORTUNATE in buying our stock this season, as it was all purchased before the recent GREAT ADVANCE.

In the fourth place, we always keep the BEST-ASSORTED STOCK in the city, and all we ask is

The Honor of a Visit,

OR

A TRIAL ORDER.

Orders receive the PERSONAL ATTENTION of one of the FIRM, and if not FILLED SATISFACTORILY the articles may be returned and the MONEY WILL BE REFUNDED.

A new hotel—the UPPER CITY—has just been completed, and is now in successful operation. It is delightfully located and the charges are moderate. It is situated within two squares of our store.

STANDARD FAMILY

MEDICINES.

EXPECTORANT.

Dr. Jayne's EXPECTORANT cures Coughs, Colds, Croup, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Pleurisy; is a prompt and certain palliative in Consumption, and all pulmonary and bronchial disorders, its action freeing the Lungs and Bronchial Tubes of irritating and obstructing matters, and healing the ulcerated surfaces.

TONIC VERMIFUGE.

Dr. D. Jayne's TONIC VERMIFUGE is a remedy especially adapted to cure many of the ordinary ailments of children, and to save them from much suffering. It utterly destroys Worms, the great pests of childhood, and purges the system of them. Its valuable tonic properties remove General Debility, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia, restoring a good tone to the system, and strengthening the stomach and digestive organs.

AGUE MIXTURE.

Dr. Jayne's AGUE MIXTURE is an infallible curative for Fever and Ague, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, and all complaints of a like nature. It breaks up the chills, and assists in restoring the liver and digestive organs to a healthy condition. It also exercises a tranquillizing effect on the nerves, and has most excellent tonic properties, which enable it, when taken in connection with the Sanative Pills, to eradicate the disease.

SANATIVE PILLS.

Dr. Jayne's SANATIVE PILLS, known all the world over as a mild, prompt and effective purgative of established efficacy in Liver Complaint, and all Bilious affections, Headache, Disordered Stomach, Dyspepsia, Female diseases, and diseases of the Skin. In small doses they are alterative and gently laxative; in large doses actively cathartic.

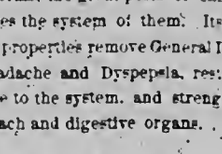
MRS. M. G. BROWN'S



CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture.

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the bloodstreaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

THE PATH THROUGH THE CORN.

Wary and bright in the summer air—
Like a quiet sea when the wind blows fair,
A night's roughest breath has scarcely curled
The green highway to an unknown world—
Soft whispers passing from shore to shore,
Like a heart content, yet desiring more;
Who feels forlorn,
Wandering thus on the path through the corn?

A short space since, and the dead leaves lay
Decrupting under the hedgerow gray;
No hum of insect nor voice of bird
Over the desolate field was ever heard;
Only above the pallid snow
Flushed rose-red in the red sun-glow;
Till, one blest morn,
Shot up into life the young green corn.

Small and feeble, slender and pale,
It bent its head to the winter gale,
Darkened the wren's soft note of cheer,
Scarcely believing spring was near;
Low chestnuts bud out, and camplons blow,
And daisies mimic the vanished snow,
Where it was born,
On either side of the path through the corn.

The corn—the corn—the beautiful corn,
Rising wonderfully, morn by morn,
First scarce as high as a fairy's wand,
Then, just in reach of a child's wee hand,
Then growing, growing—tall, green and strong,
Till the voice of the harvest in its song,
While in fond scorn
The lark out-carols the murmuring corn.

O strange, sweet path, formed day by day,
How, when and wherefore—tongue cannot say,
Some more than of life's strange paths we know
Whither they lead us, or why we go.
Or whether our eyes shall ever see
The wheat in the ear, or the fruit on the tree.
Yet—who is forlorn?
Heaven, that watered the furrows, will ripen the corn.

OLD AGE.

Age is the night of life; night is the age of day; hut, nevertheless, it is full of magnificence, and for many beings it is more hrilliant than the day. Iufinite are the relations between age and night. It is in God that we must contemplate the one, as it is in the heavens that we must study the other. See whether for its dear stars the heavens have any seasons. See the night of age; it also is strewn with stars, and even as the heavens the old man has nothing to do with seasons.; the world of vicissitudes tosses and struggles at his feet, the impassiveness of the firmament is his.

Let him withdraw himself to the depths of his pious thoughts, there space does not fail him. Let winter strike this world below, the heavens are always blue, and each diamond is a world. At times, in the prolonged night at the poles, a light appears which resembles the aurora, and in an instant dissipates the gloom; thus, with the aged man, instinctive illuminations, as if belonging to a new world, strike upon his eyes. The hours of the night do him good; it is rare that these silent companions do not hear to him, like a benediction, some thought of heaven.

"The day belongs to men," has said one of the ancients, "and the night to the gods." Yes, day, in its activity and its hustle, is to men and human things what youth and strength are to age; but night, in its silence and meditation, is to God like age, in which the contemplation of the heavenly rest triumphs over all the interests of life. Does not age resemble the repose of the last hour of the day—the repose which comes after all duties done?

The years of the old man which correspond to these hours, are they not his property more than any other? Has not he acquitted himself of all his debts, this veteran of the earth, and perhaps, according to the words of the psalmist, paid what he did not owe? That which remains to him is indeed his; and what which he possesses, is it not God's?—Translated from the French of Mme. Sievekine.

A writer in the British Medical Journal, on the wearing of false hair, makes the following alarming announcement: Every hair in a false plait ends with "a nodosity;" each nodosity contains fifty "psorosperms;" and each psorosperm throws off minute spheres which become "pseudo-navicellæ." But this is by no means the end of a bad matter. The pseudo-navicellæ in a full-room containing fifty ladies, all with the spurious tendrils, amount to forty-five million, which, when inhaled, make their way into the circulation and bring on cardiac affections!

Mr. Talmage, when arguing for a free-pew system, after describing the horrors of a shipwreck, people drowning, the launching of a lifeboat, said: "Stop; you cannot get in here unless you pay! This seat in the middle of the boat is worth a dollar; this in the bow, fifty cents; you may have that one in the stern for a quarter. If you cannot pay that, wait for the free lifeboat, the mission chapell That will be along after awhile."

The clay and the spittle were not an artistic combination; taste was not charmed by them, or culture gratified; yet by these and a wash in Siloam eyes were opened—even thus it pleases God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. Spurgeon.

A beggar's rags may cover as much pride as an alderman's gown.—

SCIENTIFIC.

It is a singular fact that the most brilliant-colored marine plants are those which live in comparative darkness. Excess of light blanches them, as lack of light does earth plants.

Mr. Elliott Cones has shown, in the American Naturalist, that no two birds, even of the same species, build their nests exactly alike. The nests of Bullock's oriole exhibit remarkable variations.

Paper More Tenacious Than Iron. A set of paper car-wheels have run over 160,000 miles of track in New Jersey, wearing out entirely a set of steel tires. Ordinary car-wheels will only run about 60,000 miles.

A writer in Nature thinks that some animals consciously imitate the colors of surrounding objects as seen with their eyes. Thus, such changes by prawns are said to cease if their eyes are removed; while certain caterpillars are found to change the color of the chrysalises formed, according to the color of the ground in which they are placed.

Prof. Cope attributes the origin of the numerous and extensive caves in the limestone rock of Virginia and Tennessee to the action of currents of running water. These excavating floods were probably at the close of the great glacial epoch, as the caves contain no fossil remains of an earlier date than the drift. The blind fish and crustaceans found in the underground waters of such caves are of similar species to those in the upper world, only modified by their peculiar circumstances. They were not created eyeless or blind, to dwell in dark caves; but the species, having found its way into subterranean waters, lost its vision; the visual organs diminished and almost disappeared, and other sense-organs became developed proportionately.

The new explosive agent, lithofracteur, so named by the inventor, Prof. Engels, has lately been successfully used both on the Continent and in England. The active principle in lithofracteur, as in dynamite, is nitro-glycerine, which, with certain other explosive compounds, is mixed with a given amount of silicious meal, thus giving to it the character of a light, dry powder. It seems impossible to explode it by concussion, as was proved by fastening a can of it to the front of a car-bumper; the car was then let loose upon a steep grade. At the foot of the incline an obstruction was so placed as to receive the full force of the blow, the car striking first. Although the car was crushed and splintered, there was no explosion. When ignited by the electric spark or fuse, the force of the blast, like that of nitro-glycerine, is downward. At Essex a block of cast-iron, fifty-three inches long, twenty-nine broad, and nineteen thick, was split through the center at a single discharge, the lithofracteur having been simply laid on the flat surface, and covered with a few handfuls of loam.

Wall-Papers and Disease.—This subject, to which we have before called attention in connection with the use of arsenical dyes, is revived by a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette. We extract a passage of the letter: Although arsenic is used more or less in papers of all colors, those with green in the pattern contain larger quantities than other papers, and the arsenic being combined with copper to produce green, the dust of copper, as well as arsenic, are inhaled, thus involving a double source of poisoning. Blue papers also appear to be especially injurious, whether they contain arsenic or not, some being covered with blue verditer, and others with Prussian blue (also used very extensively in distemper wash for walls and cornices,) both of which appear to have very injurious effects. There is also a blue pigment in use for such purposes which contains a great deal of arsenic. As all unglazed papers and distemper washes give off more or less dust into the atmosphere, though often imperceptible to the naked eye, it requires no very great stretch of imagination to realize that poisonous dust thus inhaled cannot fail to do harm; and physicians are well aware (though in this matter they have hitherto ignored it), that poisons are still more deleterious when inhaled than when swallowed, being more rapidly taken up by the blood. Consequently, as a variety of poisonous and medicinal ingredients are used for coloring wall-papers and washes, it would appear that our whole system of wall-coverings is probably one of the most gigantic errors in hygiene that has been committed in modern times. The writer mentions several instances of sickness produced, as he believes, by this cause, and continues: I will conclude by repeating what I have said elsewhere, that I believe every medical man in the kingdom is treating, day after day, numerous cases of disease originating in irritation of the mucous membrane, which stimulate almost every morbid condition under the sun, the true diagnosis of which would be "arsenical poi-

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of tirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.

Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.

G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.

T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.

——— ———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College	$60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department	40 00
Contingent expenses	5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayon Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

THE BEAUTIFUL GATE.

"'Tis a fair tradition, one of old,
That, at the gates of heaven called Beautiful,
The souls of those to whom we ministered
On earth shall greet us, as we enter in,
With grateful records of those lowly deeds
Of Christian charity, wherewith frail man
Proffers his humble loan unto the Lord.

"Oh, think, if this be true, how many eyes,
Whose weeping thou hast stilled shall glisten there;
How many hearts, whose burden thou hast shared,
And heavy feet, whose steps were turned by thee
Back to their homes, elastic through the joy
Of new-found hopes and sympathy and love,
Shall welcome thee within the gates of bliss—
The golden city of Jerusalem!"

HOW THEY WENT TO SCHOOL.

The struggles of the "poor scholars" at the universities are recalled by the experience of students at some of the Western colleges, who support themselves, while going through their collegiate course, by performing manual labor at odd hours, teaching country schools during college vacations, and pinching their stomachs and backs to furnish their heads. The chief point of difference is that the poor scholars of Oxford or Canterbury begged a maintenance, which the student of an American college would scorn to do. The author of the old poem, "God Speed the Plow," complains, in the name of the husbandman, that in addition to other burdens on him—

"Then cometh clerks of Oxford, and make their moan
To their school-hire they must have money."

Licenses to beg were sometimes given by the chancellor to the students, and Sir Thomas More shows the degrading shifts to which the embryo priests and future men of learning were sometimes reduced by saying that "then may we yet, like poor scholars of Oxford, go a begging with our bags and wallets, and sing 'Salve Regina' at rich men's doors." At one time the commonalty of Oxford set aside a yearly payment to furnish one hundred poor scholars with "a meal of bread, ale and pottage, with one large dish of flesh or fish every St. Nicholas day." That saint was probably the most blessed in the poor fellows' calendar, and the recurrence of his festival anxiously and hungrily looked forward to. The author of "Piers Plowman's Vision" warned merchants to make better use of their money by "setting scholars to school," and Chaucer's "poor clerk of Oxenford" prayed busily for the souls of those who gave him money that he might study, while his "poor scholars two" of Canterbury thought it no shame to take their sacks of college-wheat to the mill for grinding.

In time the sons of the rich came in greater numbers to the universities, and edged the children of the poor toward the doors. Even those of the "poor scholars" who remained, and passed through the prescribed course of study, were cheated out of the prize for which they had studied and struggled. The church livings were given or sold to rich men's sons or favorites, and the poor scholar, who begged that he might learn, was turned out, a graduate who had to beg for the remainder of his life.

While the sons of the rich were being trained in arms and courtesy to fit them for the knightly profession, and the sons of the country poor were picking up with painful labor the knowledge fitting them for the church, the sons of the citizens and townsmen were cared for at endowed grammar schools, of which there were many in the principal cities and towns of England. The London schools were early held in high repute. The sons of prosperous "cits" and the smaller fry of "born gentry" attended them, while the endowments of the founders and benefactors of the school made liberal provision for the maintenance and education of the poorer youth. The life of a scholar at these schools has been pictured by several who spoke from experience, some of them with a smarting recollection of the pains and sorrows of him that getteth learning.

Fitzstephen, as early as A. D. 1174, speaks of three schools connected with leading churches, at which, on festival days, the scholars held public disputations or made orations. Their sports were manifold, and are described with minuteness and evident enjoyment by the chronicler who prefaces his account with the remark that "we have all been boys." At Shrovetide the boys brought each a fighting cock to the master, and the forenoon was spent in seeing the cocks fight in the school room. Dinner followed the cock fight, and after dinner there was football in the fields. Every Sunday in Lent there was a sham fight in the fields, and on Easter holidays a game of water-quintain on the Thames. In the summer holidays the boys exercised themselves in leaping, archery, wrestling and other games of strength and skill. In winter holidays there were skating matches on the ice in the marshes to the north of the walls, with bear fights, hog fights, bull and bear baiting, as morning diversions.

Lydgate, toward the close of the fourteenth century, confessed, in his "Testament," to school-boy shortcomings that could be truthfully pleaded by many a school-boy of to-day. He says that in his boyhood, before his fifteenth year, he was "disposed to many unbridled passions," full of willfulness, loath to study and fond of play, ever ready for quarreling and fighting, but standing in awe of the master's rod. Like Shakespeare's school-boy:

"With his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school."

Lydgate "had in custom" to come to school late, and, when there, to spend his time in idle gossip and quarrel instead of in study; to lie, in order to shirk blame; and to mock his master when his back was turned. The fruit in other men's gardens tempted him, as it has tempted many school-boys since, and he climbed hedges and walls to steal apples and grapes. The innate spirit of mischief that incites boys to mock and annoy their elders, and to laugh at their misfortunes, is not peculiar to the present generation. Lydgate's chief desire, when a school-boy, was

"To scorn and jape,
Shrewd turns ever among to use;
To scoff and mow, like a wanton ape;
When I did evil, others I did accuse."

Loath to rise; more loath to go to bed; coming to dinner with dirty hands; heedless of the advice or reproofs of his friends; shamming illness when he was too lazy to study; more ready to count cherry stones than to go to church—Lydgate was such a school-boy as has vexed the souls of schoolmasters in all ages and all countries where the school is an established institution.

Lydgate says that

"Of the yard, sometime I stood in awe
To be scored; that was all my dread."

The schoolmasters in olden time were no sparers of the rod. Roger Ascham, in his "Schoolmaster," has recorded his testimony as to the manner in which the teachers of his day thrashed knowledge into their pupils, and his protest against the barbarous folly.—Thomas Tusser, who was schooled at Eton, sorrowfully tells how

"From Paul's I was to Eton sent,
To learn straightways the Latin phrase,
When fifty-three stripes given to me
At once I had:
For fault but small, or none at all.
It come to pass that beat I was.
See, Udall, see, the mercy of thee
To me, poor lad!"

But the best picture of the old-time school-boy, his troubles and his sentiments, is contained in the following verses of a well-flogged scholar of about A. D. 1500, evidently written con dolore:

"Hay! hay! by this day!
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"I would fain be a clerk;
But yet it is a strange work;
The birchen-twigs be so sharp
It maketh me have a faint heart.
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"On Monday, in the morning, when I shall rise
At six of the clock, it is the guise
To go to school without delay—
I had liever go twenty mile twice;
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"My master looketh as he were mad;
'Where hast thou been, thou sorry lad?'
'Milking ducks, my mother bade;'
It was no marvel, though I were sad.
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"My master peppered me with well good speed;
It was worse than flakel-seed;
He would not leave it till it did bleed.
Much sorrow have he for this deed!
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"I would my master were a wat (hare,)
And my book a wildcat,
And a brace of grayhounds in his tap;
I would be glad for to see that!
What availeth it me though I say nay?

"I would my master were a hare,
And all his books hounds were;
And I myself a jolly hunter;
To blow my horn I would not spare!
For, if he were dead, I would not care.
What availeth it me though I say nay?"

J. H. A. Bone, in Appleton's Journal.

THE WORK DONE BY THE HEART.

The following may be interesting as showing that indeed we are "fearfully and wonderfully made:"

"The total daily work done by the human heart is equivalent to 124,208 tons lifted one foot. The daily labor of a workman, deduced from long-continued observations of various kinds of labor, is found to be equal to 3,540 tons lifted through one foot during the ten hours. This is less than three times the work done by a single heart beating day and night for twenty-four hours. In a boat race it is calculated that fifteen foot-pounds of work are performed by each ounce of muscle during each minute of the rowing. No muscular labor that man can undertake is more severe than this: and yet this labor is only three-fourths of that which is exerted day and night during life by each of your hearts. If the heart should expend its entire force in lifting its own weight vertically, it could raise that weight 13,754 feet in an hour. An active pedestrian can climb from Zermatt to the top of Monte Rosa, 9,000 feet, in an hour; or he can lift his own body at the rate of 1,000 feet an hour, which is only one-twentieth part the energy of the heart. The heart's energy equals one-third of the total daily force of the muscles of a strong man. It exceeds by one-third the labor of the muscles in a boat race, estimated by equal weights of muscle, and is ninety times the force of all the muscles used in climbing, and eight times the force of the most powerful engine of the same size yet invented by man."

EMBARRASSING A PRIEST.

Dr. Jessup, writing to the Evangelist from Beirut, Syria, says:

I am almost amazed at the extent to which evangelical light pervades the nominally Christian communities here. The Greek Church in Beirut will go over en masse some day to Protestantism, if the light continues to spread in the future as it has in the past ten years. A prominent Greek said a few days ago: "You Protestants need not trouble yourselves about converting Syria. Our children are all going to be Protestants, whether you will or not. The Bible is doing the work." Another Greek was visited recently by a priest, who came to receive the confession of the family previous to the mass. The priest said: "My son, I have come to hear you confess." "All right, your reverence; I have a big score to confess to-day." "Go on, my son." "Well, I do not believe in the worship of pictures." (This is a cardinal point in the Greek Church.) "No matter about that, as long as you are orthodox Greek." "But I do not believe in the invocation of the Virgin and the saints." "Ah! you do not? Well, that is a small matter. Go on." "Nor do I believe in transubstantiation." "No matter about that; it is a question for the theologians." "Nor do I believe in priestly absolution." "Very well; between you and me there is room for objection to that; so no matter as long as you confess." "But I do not believe in confession to a priest." Here the priest became somewhat confused, but finally smoothed the matter over, and said: "No matter about that." The man then replied: "What business have I then in the Greek Church? Good morning, your reverence; I have done with the traditions of men."

SCRIPTURES.

Our Lord referred to the Bible as a whole—to the Bible in its grand divisions—to the Bible in its separate books. Considering the small narrative we have, we may suppose that our Lord's references were much greater. But here we have distinct references to Genesis, Exodus, Numbers, Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Samuel, the First Kings, the Second Kings, the Psalms, the Proverbs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Micah, Joel, Zechariah and Malachi. Our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom I look as the supreme authority in all religious matters—the Divine Savior, God manifest in the flesh—used the Bible as we urge all the world to use the Bible. He read it in private, storing it in his memory, used it in his devotions, went to it for comfort in his sorrows, for strength under temptation, and died with its words upon his lips. As a teacher he referred to it at the beginning of his ministry, after his resurrection. He referred to it as a book peculiar, a book paramount, a book divine. And therefore may I not be encouraged to read it, and trust to it as the guide of my life, for strength in my sorrows? If good enough for the Master, is it not good enough for the servant?—N. Hall.

"You won't have any left if you give away so many," we said to a little girl the other day who had been lavish with her kisses. "Yes, I shall," she responded quickly; "I have to pickle ever so many now, so that they won't get stale. Will you have a pickled one?" We declined; but have pondered somewhat since on stale and pickled kisses.

Many a one has kissed the trouble at parting that he met with trembling.

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE.

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.

Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.

They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.

They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

THE CONTINUED SUCCESS OF THIS INstitution is one of the best evidences of its merit. During the past term there were in attendance two hundred and twenty-nine pupils.

The members of the Faculty—eleven in number—are selected on account of their ability to teach.

Prof. ECKHARDT, Music Director, has few equals.

Madame JULIES, a Parisian lady of eighteen years' successful experience as a teacher, has been engaged to take charge of the French and Ornamental Department.

The very best care is taken of our pupils, both as to health and manners. Rare are provided for all.

No extravagance in dress is allowed.

The good health of Brookhaven is proverbial. Pupils from the miasmatic regions of Louisiana and Mississippi find this as healthful a school as can be found anywhere.

The charges are believed to be lower than in any school in the Southwest where similar advantages are afforded. Only from $230 to $265 for all expenses, excepting music, French and the ornamental branches.

No expense is spared in purchasing the most approved apparatus, maps, charts, etc., and all necessary school furniture.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1872. NO. 52.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

We condense from the Eufaula Daily Times:

First Day.

The Alabama Conference met in Eufanla, December 11, 1872, at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Doggett presiding. The session was held in Hart's Hall.

There was no bnsiness of pnblic importance transacted other than the appointment of various committees to furnish business for the Conference, and the examination of the character of ministers, etc.

We did not have an opportunity to attend the Conference yesterday, but hear that there were between one hundred and fifty and two hundred ministers present. We would be much pleased if the secretary would furnish us a brief of the proceedings daily, and the names of ministers appointed to preach in the varions churches of the city during Conference.

Second Day.

The Conference opened at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Doggett in the chair. Religious services by Rev. Josiah Barker, of Greenville station. The name of Rev. George Bancroft, who was transferred to this from the North Mississippi Conference, was added to the roll.

A. V. Lee, who was elected statistical secretary, not being able to attend, was excused, and Rev. J. J. Garrett, of Greenwood, was elected to fill his place.

Rev. H. D. Moore, of the South Georgia Conference, was introduced to the Conference.

The secretary presented an address from the Good Templars on the subject of temperance, which was referred, without being read, to the special Committee on Temperance.

The Bishop announced the following as the Committee on the State of the Church: Dr. A. S. Andrews, Dr. J. Hamilton, M. C. Turrentine, S. P. Richardson and Dr. W. H. Ellison.

Rev. W. H. Wild was appointed to look after the interests of the Quarterly Review, and Rev. M. E. Butt to attend to those of the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Rev. S. F. Pilley was added to the Committee on Memoirs.

Dr. A. S. Andrews, president of the Southern University, at Greensboro, submitted the annual report of the Board of Trustees of that institution, which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Examination of character resumed. Prof. J. S. Moore, A. D. McVoy, examined and passed.

Rev. E. T. Birch, of the South Georgia Conference, was introdnced to the Conference. He has recently been transferred to this Conference.

After the usual announcements the Conference adjourned, with the benediction by the Bishop, nntil nine o'clock to-morrow.

Third Day.

The Conference met at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Doggett in the chair. Religious services conducted by Rev. Drs. Thomas O. Summers, Sr., and Jefferson Hamilton. The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

Rev. Mr. McDaniel moved a reconsideration of the vote, yesterday, by which the case of Rev. J. Walker was referred to the presiding elder of his district. The vote was reconsidered and Mr. Walker's character was passed, and, on motion of Dr. Hamilton, he was located.

J. E. Cobh was relieved from the Committee on Sunday Schools, in view of responsible duties on another committee, and, on motion of J. W. Shores, Sr., C. Monefee was substituted in his place.

On motion of Mr. Bounds the vote by which G. R. Talley was placed upon the superannuated list was reconsidered.

A vacancy having occnrred in the secretaryship of the Mission Board by the transfer of Rev. B. B. Ross to the North Alabama Conference, Rev. F. L. B. Shaver wae elected to supply his place.

Question 20 (resumed)—Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration? The examination of elders continned.

B. B. Ross, passed and transferred to North Alahama Conference and stationed at Huntsville. Dr. Summers offered the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we deeply regret the necessity of the transfer of Bro. Ross to another Conference, and express our high appreciation of his character; we will follow him with our prayers and kindly regards, and will welcome him back to our ranks when Providence shall open the way.

M. C. Tnrrentine passed. He has been in the ministry fifty-two years, and this Conference-year has made eighteen hnndred pastoral visitations. The Bishop remarked: "His was a green old age." "Not awkwardness, as green sometimes means," snggested Dr. Hamilton. "But fat and flonrishing," said the Bishop.

R. H. Rogers, passed and located at his reqnest.

When Dr. Hamilton's name was called, having been transferred to the North Alahama Conference, he addressed the Conference, and said he had been a member for thirty-four years. Only two members are now living who were here when he joined. It was sad to sever his connection for even one year. He expected to come hack if he lives. He has always wished to be known within its limits. His wife charged him to say to the Conference that she did not transfer, but was still a member of the Alabama Conference. Dr. Hamilton expects to be away from his brethren at furthest hut for two years. He goes to Tuskaloosa at the earnest request of the church there.

Dr. Summers, after some remarks a la Summers, offered a resolution expressive of the regret of the Conference at the transfer of Dr. Hamilton, and hoping he will seen return to his former relations to it.

The trustees of the Tuskegee Female College submitted their annual report, which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Fourth Day.

A communication from the Mobile Register Printing Association, tendering that paper to each member of the Conference for another year, was read.

Colonel J. W. Portis read a communication from the trnstees of Tuskegee Female College, defining the relation of this institution to the Conference, which, on motion of William M. Motley, was laid on the table for the present.

Rev. R. J. Harp, member of the Louisiana Conference, and representative of the interests of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Book Concern, was introduced and welcomed.

Reports from the New Orleans Publishing House were submitted by R. J. Harp, agent. They were read and referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

M. S. Andrews and S. H. Cox offered the following resolution, which was nnanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Conference are dne and are hereby tendered to the editors and managere of the Mobile Register for their generous offer of a copy of their paper to each member of this body for the year 1873.

Question 2—Who remain on trial? John B. Peterson, Joseph S. Spear, George Bancroft, W. S. Wade, T. C. M. Golland and D. C. Stanley, passed and continued.

W. H. Wetherly, of the first year, passed, and at his own request was discontinued.

Rev. J. B. Cotfrell, of North Mississippi Conference, was introduced and met a hearty welcome from his brethren, with whom he was long associated.

The Bishop read a communication announcing the transfer of Rev. H. D. Moore, of the South Georgia, to this Conference.

The preachers of the second year, viz.: P. B. Saffold, John M. Brown, J. M. Mason and Thomas O. Summers, Jr., were called before the Bishop, and after some serious remarks by him, and amid solemn silence, were asked the heart-searching questions reqnired by the Discipline.

Having stood the required examination and been reported favorably by the committee, P. B. Saffold, J. M. Brown and J. M. Mason were passed, received into full connection and elected to deacon's orders.

Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Jr., was passed and elected to elder's orders.

The preachers of the third year, R. H. Harris, A. S. Douglass, W. F. Boeton, J. S. Williams, I. Z. T. Morris and Charles B. DuBose, examined and passed.

The preachers of the fourth year, W. Hargrove Morris, D. J. Wright and Charles B. Nicholsen, were passed and elected to elder's orders.

C. B. Nicholson was transferred to the Florida Conference.

On motion of Dr. Hamilton the morning session was prolonged.

Question 10—What local preachere are elected to deacon's orders? Philip S. Lightfeet, Benjamin H. Reynolds and E. M. Johnson.

Question 14—What local preachers are elected elders? Edwin Robertsen, Stephen M. Gilmore and Henry Metcalf.

Milton J. Hilliard, ordained elder of the Methodist Protestant Church, was recognized by the Conference as an elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church Sonth.

Sampsen R. Burch, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was recognized as an elder in the Church South. The credentials of James M. Mills, deacon, having been lost or mislaid, the secretary was ordered to furnish him with a certificate of his ordination.

Fifth Day.

The secretary presented and read a communication from Dr. J. B. McFerrin, missionary secretary, detailing the operations in the field of missions, foreign and domestic, during the last Conference year.

Question 18—Who are superannnated? Z. Dowling, S. F. Pilley, G. Garrett, E. W. Story, O. R. Blue, J. W. Jordan, J. W. Talley, J. T. Tatum.

Question 17—Who are supernnmerary? Charles Strider and J. A. Spence.

The examination of the character and relations of the superannuated and snpernumerary members of the Conference formed an interesting part of to-day's session. These are the old veterans who have herne the burden and heat of the day, the pioneers of Methodism who first preached the gospel in Alahama, and prepared the way for the towns and cities which have sprung up, and the whilom prosperity that once blessed the conntry. They occupy a tender place in the hearts of their brethren of the Conference, and of the people whom they have so faithfully served. It was good to hear the testimony borne to their fidelity hy those who have shared with them the sorrows and the joys of itinerant life. It was interesting to know how, in many instances, these venerable men, after having served God and their generation faithfully, and during all their manhood's prime, are often straightened, in the evening of their days, for the necessaries of life. The church and people owe them a debt of gratitude which ought never to be forgotten, and which shonld see that the "barrel of meal should not waste, nor the oil in the cruse."

Question 1—Who are admitted on trial? From Mobile district, Joseph H. James and James O. Andrew; from Selma district, Asbnry C. Hnndley and John F. Frazer; from Greensboro district, Ransom A. Miears; from Montgomery district, Philip H. Lightfoot and Charlee R. Williamson; from Eufanla district, Thomas W. Dyer, Emmett W. Solomon and James S. Matherson; from Camden district, Archibald W. L. Douglass; from Union Springs district, Philip H. Mess.

The Bishop called the attention of the Conference to the pressure upon Dr. A. H. Redford, book agent, for help to rebuild the Publishing House at Nashville. In this connection Dr. Summers entertained the Conference with an interesting description of the new House now building.

Bros. Bancroft and Cotton offered a resolntion expressive of the pleasure of the Conference at hearing Dr. Summers' account of the new Publishing House building, and engaging to fit up a suitable room for the book editor, the money to be paid by the first of May next. This resolntiou was complimentary to Dr. Snmmers and was unanimously adopted.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Rev. J. Bancroft submitted the report of the Committee on Sunday Schools, which was adopted. The report statee that there are 273 Sabbath schools; 140 use the uniform lessons. There is a falling off of 95 schools. There have been 798 accessions to the church from Sunday schools. There are 11,284 children in the Sahhath schools.

Bro. Bancroft also snhmitted the report of the visiting committee to the Southern University, at Greenshero, which was adopted.

Judge P. G. Wood made the report of the Legal Conference, which was adopted.

Judge Wood also submitted the report of the Finance Board. Conference collections—Amount assessed, $8,100; amount collected, $5,442.80; deficiency, $2,657.20. Bishops' fund—Assessed, $1,530; collected, $1,485.90; deficiency, $44.10. Amount distributed, $5,387.80, being sixty per cent. of the assessment made for the superannuated ministers, widows and orphans of deceased preachers. The report was adopted.

Rev. S. P. Richardson made the report of the Committee on Temperance. Pending its consideration the Conference adjonrned until nine o'clock A. M. to-morrow, with the benediction.

Sixth Day—Morning Session.

Rev. Dr. Cotten presented the action of the Enfaula Qnarterly Conference in reference to restering the credentils of Rev. Junius Jordan, a local elder, and the Conference so ordered.

Dr. A. S. Andrews, chairman, submitted the report of the Committee on the State of the Church.

This report was an able review of the Methodism of the olden time, and an earnest exhortation to holiness of life.

A very interesting debate followed, in which Revs. Barker, A. S. and M. T. Andrews, Ellison, Shapard, Hamilton and Morgan took part. The committee asked and obtained leave to withdraw the report.

The consideration of the report of the Committee on Temperance, which was under consideration when the Conference adjourned on Saturday afternoon, was renewed, and speeches were made by Messrs. Richardson, Hamilton, Shapard, McCarty and Garrett. The resolutions of the report were adopted and the preamble laid npon the table.

Rev. J. N. Rush, chairman, snbmitted the report of the Committee on Education. This report is a full exposition of the educational interests of the Conference, and the present condition of the institutions of learning belonging to the church. This is one of the overshadowing interests of the church, and commands the liveliest care of the Conference.

Dr. Ellison moved the adoption of that part of the report which related to the Southern University, at Greensboro.

Mr. Morgan moved a proviso to the resolntion reported by the committee.

Rev. S. P. Richardson was elected a member of the Mission Board.

Pending the consideration of this snbject, on motion of Dr. Mitchell, the morning session was postponed.

On motion of Rev. S. P. Richardson the Conference adjourned to half-past three o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Conference met according to adjournment. Services by Rev. D. M. Hudson.

The subjects under consideration this forenoon were postponed until to-morrow morning.

Rev. J. M. Moore, chairman, made the report of the Committee on the Bible Cause, which was adopted.

Rev. G. T. Smith, chairman, read the reports of the Financial Board, which were adopted.

Selma was selected as the place for the session of the next Conference.

J. J. Garrett, Esq., made the statistical report, showing the nnmber of members of the church, accessions, decrease, Sunday schools, scholars, volumes in library, amount of money expended, and all other statistics nsually embraced in this report.

The amount assessed for the support of the preachers in charge, not including presiding elders, was $80,692.75; amount paid on this assessment, $75,268.83; deficiency, $5,423.92.

The preachers fell short this amount in receiving the salaries assessed for them. The report was adopted.

Rev. R. W. Crawford made the report of the Committee on Memoirs of Rev. R. E. Carey; Rev. E. F. Loveless, that on Rev. Dr. J. M. Jennings; Rev. J. E. Fanst, that on Rev. J. G. Rush. On the adoption of the reports very interesting and feeling tributes to the memory and virtues of these warriors, who have fought their last battle and won the victor's crown, were made by Revs. E. Wadsworth, J. W. Shores, J. Barker, T. O. Summers, Sr., A. M. Jones, H. Urquhart, Pardne, A. S. Andrews and Bishop Doggett.

The Conference united in singing a portion of one of the beautiful funeral hymns suited to the solemn occasion, and Dr. A. S. Andrews followed in prayer.

Conference then adjonrned, with the benediction, till nine o'clock A. M. to-morrow.

Seventh Day.

Rev. Mr. Morgan submitted the report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

Rev. E. Wadsworth, A. J. Briggs and J. W. Rush were recommended as the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Rev. W. M. Motley moved the adoption of the report.

Dr. Summers addressed the Conference in relation to the operations of the Publishing House at Nashville, and made mention of many valnable works recently issued from the press under his supervision. He urged with great force the importance of circulating the literature of the church, and rallying to the support of the men who are laboring diligently to build np the important interests which center at Nashville.

Rev. R. J. Harp, agent of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and of the New Orleans branch of the Publishing House, followed in remarks explanatory of the condition and prospects of the interests nnder his charge. Thesowere represented as being in a very satisfactory condition.

After some remarks by Bishop Doggett, relating especially to the Quarterly Review, the report was adopted.

The Bishop called np the report of the Committee on Edncation. The qnestion as to the proper application of the annually accruing interest npon the invested funds under the control of the Legal Conference, caused the renewal of the debate which was had when this question was under consideration. M. S. Andrews offered a clear, well-drawn and elaborate plan as a substitute for that part of the report of the Committee on Education which related to the Southern University. This plan proposes to give the interest annually on $10,000 to the University at Greenshere, and that on $3,000 to the female college at Tuskegee, to be appropriated to the education of the sons and daughters of traveling preachers, and of such young men as are preparing for the ministry who may need assistance. This plan harmonized many conflicting views, and called ont hearty approval on the part of Messrs. McCarty and Morgan, who had strongly opposed the original report.

Rev. Mr. Shapard did not believe this was the best and most appropriate use that could be made of this fnnd, and he could not vote for it, hut was willing that such of his brothers as could should do so.

Rev. A. S. Andrews preferred the original report, and made a strong speech in its favor.

After some modification of the proposed substitute, it was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Education was then adopted.

Rev. J. W. Rush submitted a supplementary report from the Committee on Education in relation to the Tuskegee Female College. Colonel J. W. Portis made an explanation of the legal status of the question involved. The report was adopted.

Revs. E. S. Smith, W. M. Motley, J. Bancroft, J. W. Rush, R. J. Ligon, W. J. Gautier and J. J. Cobh were elected trnstees of the Tuskegee Female College.

Rev. S. P. Richardson made the report of the Preachers' Aid Society, which was adopted.

H. Urquhart, S. H. Dent, G. L. Smith, W. A. McCarty and M. S. Andrews were elected trnstees of the Southern University.

M. S. Andrews announced the missionary assessments for the presiding elders' districts for the next year. After some amendments the report was adopted.

Dr. Summers offered resolntions of thanks to the citizens, pastors of churches, Captain Henry C. Hart, railroads and steamboats, for courtesies extended to the members, and to the secretaries for faithful and prompt attention.

Rev. E. S. Smith was substituted in the place of B. B. Ross on the Committee of Examination of the class for the fourth year.

Rev. J. S. Paco was located at his request.

Dr. Summers offered a resolntion of sympathy with Dr. LeVert, who was continued on the superannuated list, as was also Dr. Murrah.

S. T. Douglase and W. B. Dennis were located at their request.

On motion of Dr. T. H. Cox the morning session was prolonged.

A. H. Mitchell, M. S. Andrews, D. M. Hudson, W. A. McCarty and P. G. Wood were elected officers of the Legal Conference—A. H. Mitchell, president, and P. G. Wood, treasurer.

Dr. A. S. Andrews, president, addressed the Conference on the condition and future prospects of the Southern University, which he represented as being in a better condition than it has been at any time since the war.

Rev. R. J. Harp addressed the Conference on the subject of the cost of books, and matters and things connected with his agency at New Orleans.

The minutes were read, corrected and approved. The Bishop took the chair.

Visiting committees to the Conference institutions were appointed.

The Bishop announced the clerical members of the Board of Finance.

Before asking the last question the Conference united in singing the beautiful hymn:

"And let our bodies part,"

and Dr. Summers offered a fervent prayer.

Bishop Doggett addressed the Conference most appropriately and touchingly before reading the appointments, and it was a source of deep regret to the large audience that his time was too limited to extend his remarks.

Question 31—Where are the preachers stationed this year? The Bishop then read the appointments and declared the Conference adjourned sine die.

APPOINTMENTS.

MOBILE DISTRICT.—H. Urquhart, P. E. Franklin street, J. W. Rush; City mission, J. A. Peterson; Eastern Shore, J. C. Andrews; St. Francis street, W. Shapard; St. Paul's, J. E. Foust; Whistler, A. J. Coleman; Citronelle, C. R. Williamson; St. Stephen's and Washington mission, W. Hargrave Morris; Pensacola, D. M. Hudson; Milton, E. P. Birch; Pollard, D. C. Stapley; Mount Pleasant, J. H. James.

THEIR THOUGHTS AND OUR THOUGHTS.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Six years have faded since she went away,
Six years for her to live in heavenly places,
To learn the look of blessed angel faces;
Six years to grow as only angels may.

I wonder oft what she is doing there,
By the still waters that forever flow;
What mighty secrets she has come to know;
What graces won, divinely sweet and fair.

I wonder who of those that went before,
And those that followed on her shining way,
She has met there in heaven's auroral day,
And if they talk their earth-life o'er and o'er.

I think this very morning they are met,
She and one other only three years gone,
In some dear place in heaven secure and lone,
To talk of things they never can forget.

For I am sure that naught of their new life,
No grace or glory that is there revealed,
The fountains of past love has ever sealed,
That these will ever be with sweetness rife.

I cannot think of them as they are now,
Of the new light that shines upon their faces;
I cannot image forth their angel graces;
And I am glad, so glad, that it is so.

We shall get used to such things by and by:
The angels will not miss the look they wore;
For us they wear the look they wore before;
No other look will that, for us, can vie.

So we will think of them just as they were,
Their voices sweet and all their pleasant ways;
And thoughts like these shall help us through the days,
Until we go to meet them where they are.

Independent.

PRESIDING ELDERS.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the seventeenth of October last I notice that Fiat Justitia, instead of answering the question of Inquirer about the propriety of abolishing the office of presiding elder, goes aside to give Inquirer a thrust for asserting that two pastors made a custom or rule of action for the church. I will admit that Fiat Justitia is right, and that the two pastors mentioned did not make the custom universal; and that out of twenty-five or more preachers, sent in different years to a circuit, only these two were found performing the whole duty of both preachers and pastors. But this is a side issue, and has nothing to do with the main question.

Fiat Justitia seems to think that my article reflects upon the character of presiding elders. I did not so intend it, neither do I think it will fairly bear that interpretation. I thought then, and still think, that an office could be useless, and the incumbent without spot or blemish. On the other hand, I think the office might be one of great honor and distinction, and the incumbent not so very honorable. I am aware that there is a great tendency to hold in reverence those high in office. This may be right and proper, but has nothing to do with the utility of the office. Fiat Justitia gives us a long list of presiding elders; and for what purpose I know not, as Inquirer disclaims all intention of warring against either living or dead presiding elders. Neither can my article be tortured into that interpretation, except perhaps in one particular, where I stated that custom (I meant on my district) did not require the presiding elder to preach more than two big sermons at a quarterly meeting (I should have added on my circuit.) I will now add that custom has not made it universal or unchangeable, as I have been credibly informed that it has been broken through lately, and that as many as four big sermons have been preached by the presiding elder on my district, at a quarterly meeting in the country. I hope this will be a sufficient disclaimer for Fiat Justitia, unless he is disposed to attack Mr. Custom.

Mr. Editor, if you will bear with me I will state how I came to ask the question I did.

1. I saw D. D. written after your name, and of course supposed you were learned in theology and the usages of the church, and were not only capable, but willing to instruct your less informed brethren.

2. Not long since I asked a brother to give something for the support of the ministry. He answered: "I am called upon to give to preachers, Bishops, presiding elders, worn-out preachers, the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, to missions, Bible cause, building churches, parsonages," etc.; and then asked: "Cannot some be dispensed with?" In reply I said to him: "You must have a church to worship in; you must have a preacher, and see that he has a comfortable support; you must help to support the Bishops; you must help to send the Bible to the heathen," etc. But when he asked the question, "Cannot the office of presiding elder be dispensed with?" I must confess I could not answer the question satisfactorily, either to him or myself. I did not propound the question in a captious or fault-finding spirit; but living, as I do, in a section ruined by the late war, I wished to know if any of the burdens above mentioned could be taken off the shoulders of our over-taxed and down-trodden people.

I had read somewhere that the office was unknown in the early days of the church, and had taken up the idea that it was introduced to meet an emergency, and that when that emergency ceased to exist it could be laid aside. If it is a settled point that the office is necessary to the itineracy, and that it cannot exist without it, then I have nothing more to say. INQUIRER.

SPIRITUAL DEATH.

MR. EDITOR: In the reply of M. to my article on Spiritual Death he says: "Eternal death is spiritual death perpetuated or eternized." What would you understand by such an expression but that spiritual death is eternal death? If life is eternized, it becomes eternal life. So with spiritual death—if eternized it becomes eternal death. Hence by his own words he makes spiritual and eternal death one and the same.

Here I desire to ask M. one or two questions. 1. When did man inherit temporal death? 2. How often can a man die spiritually? I ask these questions because, if Adam was created pure and holy, as is often represented, the death penalty was not attached to him then, and must have been assigned by God afterward. When was it? M. tells us when he says: "It is true that, being denied access to the tree of life, he began to die a natural death, and after awhile did die." If this is true, how wonderful the surroundings. Just imagine a man whose vital powers are such that it takes more than eight hundred years for him to die, and yet he is dying all the time! But this is not all; during his dying moments he actually begets children. But M. is mistaken, for the "Bible is the standard of truth," and it says that God said unto Adam: "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."—Genesis iii, 17, 19. What is plainer than this? Here God refers to his command not to eat of the tree of knowledge, and tells him, because he did do it, he shall suffer this penalty. Is there any spiritual death here spoken of by God? Is it referred to in any way or by any passage? "The Bible is the standard of truth," and this is what the Bible says about that penalty: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now, M., look at it good, study it closely, and if you can extract any other death than this from it you will do it by drawing an inference, or extract it from some other source, and not from the "standard of truth."

Again, he says that "the writer seems to entertain the idea that man repented before the promise of a Savior was given." I have always been taught, "but perhaps wrongfully," that a promise was contained in God's language when addressed to the serpent, wherein the seed of the woman is to bruise the serpent's head. If there was, why may not Adam have looked to the fulfillment of that promise?

Again, M. quotes a number of passages, all of which are figurative expressions, showing the total depravity of the soul of the unregenerate man. Now I believe in those passages as strongly as he does, and I believe, "as every tub has to stand on its own bottom," that I have as much right as he in rendering those passages; and I think he places too great a stress upon the term "death," or dead. Now, in all these passages "dead" seems to me to mean "devoid of the workings of God's Spirit"—that the soul is alive, but full of sin and corruption; and in regeneration these are driven out and their places filled with the graces of the Spirit of God. Suppose we look at some parallel passages.

Gall. ii, 19, 20: "For I, through the law, am dead to the law, that I might live unto God." "I am crucified with Christ," etc.

First Cor. xv: "Awake to righteousness, and sin not." The twenty-first verse says: "By man came death; by man came also the resurrection of the dead."

Luke viii, 52: "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth."

Matt. v, 1: "And seeing the multitude, he went up into a mountain."

We might continue to quote to show that these expressions were figurative, but these are enough.

But now, under M.'s interpretation, what shall we say of children who die in their infancy? They are born in sin, and accordingly must be spiritually dead.

What shall we say of grown-up people who never heard of salvation, if his interpretation is correct? Refer to Romans ii, 14, and, after reading, see if they are dead spiritually.

We now turn to article number two from J. W. E.; and we can only say to him, as quoted from the Bible just above, that the language he uses, which was spoken to Adam, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," was interpreted to Adam in an after-conversation with God, in which he tells him plainly that for this act he should die temporally. "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." Now this is God's interpretation of his own language in regard to this particular transaction. It could have reference to nothing else, for all points are clearly specified, and their results. But he says: "Why should we care if there is a judgment after soul and body are dead?" For this reason given by Christ to his disciples, where he tells them to "fear not those who can kill the body, but fear him who can cast both soul and body into hell."

Again he says: "What did Adam lose in the garden, or what died the day he ate the forbidden fruit?" Does the Bible tell us that anything died on that day? It is the record we go by. If Adam had died any actual death on that day, don't you suppose it would have been recorded? To say he died spiritually is not in the record; and stick to that, Bro. E. An inference is compelled to be drawn if you assume that position. God tells us himself the result of that day's transactions in his language to Adam.

But what did he lose? I will tell you. 1. He lost faith in God, for he believed what the serpent told the woman, and disobeyed God. He lost what Peter lost when he denied his Lord. He lost holiness of heart and purity of soul, and received instead sin, iniquity and depravity. He lost Paradise, which only could be regained by death. Had he never been ensnared by the Devil, would there ever have been death of any kind entailed upon the human family? To use E.'s own language: "St. Paul tells us to be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and to put on the new man (this righteousness and true holiness.) Evidently Adam possessed this when created, and he was to keep it by the exercise of this spirit of the mind." All true; but he did not do it, for "by transgression he lost this mind, and entailed upon himself a mind unto uncleanness, and to iniquity unto iniquity."

Again he says: "His mind and conscience was defiled, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." All this is true; but these are not the characteristics of dead matter, but exhibit a living, active principle, though it be evil, that existed in that mind and conscience. To say that he was in his conduct individually an active coworker with the Devil would be wrong; but to look upon him as ensnared by the Devil, and a fallen being, that was once pure, holy and good, and a greatly disappointed man, is only to do him justice; for we see in his life that God blessed him almost immediately after the curse was inflicted upon him. For J. W. E. to assume that he was spiritually dead at this time is palpably wrong, for it is not in the record anywhere. He can say that he was a reprobate; he can say he was vile to disobedience; he can say he had greatly fallen, and was foully contaminated with sin; but nowhere in his history, in the Bible, can we find that he was spiritually dead. You hold the Bible to be the standard of truth, and I hold you to Adam's record, and what it says—not what you think.

J. W. E. says of me: "He argues from Rom. vi, 16–23 that spiritual death and eternal death are one and the same thing;" and closes by saying: "There must be a resurrection of the dead before there is spiritual death. If Adam left the garden with a hope still lingering in his soul, if well grounded, it was because he had faith in God's promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head." Well said. If you are a minister, I would ask you if you have preached from that promise? Do you not believe that promise? Then why not let Adam do so? But you did let him do so, for you say again: "He incurred the penalty by unbelief, and God saw proper to restore him by the exercise of the same faculty—belief;" and "the same holds good to this day."

What is this, Mr. Editor, but a virtual admission, on the part of J. W. E., that he was not spiritually dead—an admission of a misstep, a fall on the part of Adam; but God restored him to his place. Like Joseph's dream, the chief butler he restored to his office, and the chief baker he hanged. "The same holds good to this day." All right; but we are riding the same train now.

Again he says: "If, in the still more forcible language of Jesus to Nicodemus, 'we must be born again,' the word of God was true—Adam did die spiritually the day he ate the forbidden fruit." The word of God is always true; but did he say that Adam died spiritually that day? Where did he say it? Not in the Bible. You only draw an inference, and seem to think he ought to have said it, for he must have meant it. Let God explain his own language in regard to this very transaction, which he does do, in Gen. iii, 17, 18 and 19, pointedly and in such a way that it cannot be misapprehended, if you will only read it. "Must be born again" is figurative language. What can a man enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born? Art thou a judge in Israel, and knowest not these things? And does not Christ show him the meaning of the new birth, which is of water and the Spirit—"putting off the old and putting on the new man?"

Now let us consider the time in God's language to Adam. Physical death was the result of Adam's moral defection, or his transgression. That there is a physical, spiritual or eternal death admits of not a doubt. "In the day then eatest thereof then shalt surely die." Shall we consider day as the twenty-four hours of our time? If so, then he must die, if die at all, all or every death in that day—death temporal, death eternal, and, if you will have it so, death spiritual. If the time specified applies to one it applies to all. But by the very interpretation of God's language we have the right to say that by that transgression the law of death was inflicted, or death as the subject was given control of the human body as the subject to be acted upon. Adam did not die in the twenty-four hours, nor for many years subsequent to it; yet he and his posterity were made subject to death—physical death—as one part of the penalty.

Now what was the other part of the penalty that referred to Adam? for this penalty was pronounced against Adam, soul and body; for it was, "Thou shalt die"—not the body die only, but as man was made a "living soul," and invested with a body human, both his natures, wrapt in unity, were subjected to this penalty. But when to be enforced is the great question. We see that the body died ages after—over eight hundred years. Apply the same rule of time, if there was a rule, or give time the same consideration in both cases, and we reasonably conclude that the soul should "surely die;" not that day, but, according to God's action upon the body, in ages yet to come. Hence we draw the inference that, as Adam violated God's law by disobedience, his soul became full of sin and corruption; that all purity was driven out, and impurity or iniquity usurped its place; and as the soul joined with the body in the offense, so, like it, it must partake of the punishment. But it did not do it on that day, but was encased in the body for a lifetime—the lifetime of Adam. Then, if it died at all, it died after the body. It became impure long before, even at the entrance of sin into it; but it died not until it was banished into outer darkness, which, we learn, was the second death, or eternal death. The death of the body was the first death of any kind of which we have any record, and the Bible tells us (Rev. ii, 10 and 11:) "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Behold, the Devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. xxi, 8: "But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." Which is the death of the spirit or soul, or spiritual death, or synonymous eternal death.

We believe in the want of spirituality in Adam, or impurity in Adam, or want of holiness in Adam, as much as M. or E.; but do not believe that death of any kind happened to the soul until after the death of the body, which was the first. Then, as quoted above, you have the second death. We believe that Adam fell from his pure and holy estate, which never could be regained only by "belief" or faith again in the Lord Jesus Christ.

According to the Scriptures, "the true light lighteth every man that cometh into the world," so that none are left destitute of at least a degree of grace shining upon their dark and polluted souls. P.

PRACTICAL HINTS.

MR. EDITOR: I notice some disputation between certain brethren about the locality and materiality and immateriality of heaven. Now I take the Scripture account, explained or unexplained, as all correct and entirely satisfactory, and do not care where it (heaven) is, or what it is built of. The question is almost as edifying as that of "the intermediate state" or "the state of the dead." But if, by the way, the streets are paved with gold, there are some going there, they tell me, who would do well to enter into life with one eye, or no eyes, lest they be like mammon—look down too much as they walk on the precious metal, and, like him, be found to be on the wrong side.

But there is an item about heaven, practicable and very full of comfort, and one not talked about, so far as I know. And because of this I write these lines, not that I wish to appear in the papers, or much expect that you will publish anything from my rude pen; but because I love the idea, and the precious souls for whom it is intended. It is this: that heaven is rather a state than a place. I hear the people preach, pray, sing and talk of going to heaven by-and-by, and want to go—glad that they have to die—and yet very tenacious of life; going to heaven, but making haste slowly. Now "I would live always"—I would. No use for dying, but a considerable appetite for living; and if Elijah's chariot were to descend to my door this cold morning, and invite me to a seat, I think I should say: "Please call again, with room for wife and babe."

I do not doubt that heaven is located to all who would wish it, and material to all materialists; in short, it is heaven in all that heaven means, and God is to us all we want him to be. Nay, there is nothing else to want, or that the soul desires. He is all in all,—"the sea of love where all our passions move." Is he local, material, or a walled city with golden streets? Must I die to go to him? Does death, like a narrow sea, divide him from me, as the song goes? Nay, verily. Heaven is a state of the soul of man, whatever else it may or may not be; and one who loves God has in him a whole kingdom of heaven, king and all, and is a king himself; and of this view we may know something of what we write and speak. And we do, thanks be unto God!

Going to heaven when you die, eh? Why wait so long for your good things? Going to be saved after death? How do you know it? Going to take a long journey into a far country, and you don't know the way, may be. You were soundly converted a long time ago; are you converted now? Are you now saved? Are you now in heaven?

Well, let us see. Faith in God through Christ is salvation—present salvation—and need not end, but be eternal. And salvation is heaven. So we need not go to heaven; no, just let it come to us, and have it in us, and not wait so long for our best things, when God is all engaged to make us happy now.

Let us change our principles, practices and vocabulary, and talk no more about what we are going to do and be and have away over yonder—somewhere and a great while off. Yes, it is just as far off as we would have it to be; and God is just as far off as we would have him to be, and just as near as we want him, blessed be his holy name, this holy Sabbath day!

J. W. JORDAN.

SUNDAY SICKNESS.

Dr. ——, among other valuable papers, a few years ago published one describing this remarkable disease, which has not yet been treated in books of pathology:

1. This disease is of the intermitting kind, attacking the patient by violent paroxysms, which return every seventh day. These paroxysms return only on the Lord's day, and hence it is called Sunday sickness, but by the faculty it is technically known by no other name than "Dies Domini Morbus."

2. It partakes somewhat of the nature of ague, especially as it is attended with a great degree of coldness. This coldness is first apparent early in the morning of the Lord's day, in many cases seizing the patient before he has left his bed. But it begins in the region of the heart, and is attended with dullness of the head, followed by yawning and lethargy.

3. The patient is sometimes deprived of the use of his limbs, especially the legs and feet, so that he is indisposed to walk to the house of God.

4. In some cases this attack has come upon them after they have gone to the house of God, and has been attended with yawning and slumber.

5. In other cases there has been great uneasiness in the house of God, and a disposition to complain of the length of the sermon, though they have been known to sit very contentedly in a playhouse several hours at a time.

6. Persons affected with this disease never mourn on account of their confinement from public worship, as many afflicted with other diseases often do.

7. These persons often surprise their neighbors with their great activity and health on Monday, however unfavorable the weather may be.

8. Most of the faculty agree that there is a low, feverish heat, technically called febris mundi, or fever of the world, which may be detected in these patients during the intervening days of the week.

9. There also seems to be a loss of appetite for savory food, and a want of relish for panis vitæ, bread of life, which in this case is the indispensable remedy for the disease.

10. Persons affected with this disease generally have a disrelish for private religious exercises of the closet and the reading of the Scriptures.

11. This disease is also contagious; neighbors receive it from neighbors, and children from parents.—Examiner.

THE PRAYER, the self-control, the daily example by word and even look, needed by every mother, make her vocation one of greatest self-improvement, if used aright. And the little rewards, sprinkled along the way—the unlooked-for returns in deepest affection—are sometimes almost overwhelming.

REAL FORESIGHT consists of reserving our own forces. If we labor with anxiety about the future we destroy that strength which will enable us to meet the future. If we take more in hand than now we can do well, we break up, and the work is broken up with us.

Obituaries.

OLIVER HUNTER MINTER was born February 3, 1827, in Putnam county, Georgia; was married July 25, 1848, and died November 19, 1872.

He moved to Louisiana in 1854, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1862, under the administration of Rev. B. Clegg. Bro. Minter had never experienced that change of heart which he desired to, up to the date of his sickness; but during his illness he was very penitent, and, we trust, experienced a satisfactory change before death. He was sick for a month or more, suffering very much, but bore his sickness with great patience. He was speechless and delirious for several days before his death.

He leaves behind a dear wife, two daughters, one son, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn his loss; but we trust their loss is his eternal gain. May God bless his disconsolate wife and children.

W. D. STAYTON.

EMMA MINTER, daughter of O. H. and W. Minter, died November 5, 1872, at Springville, Louisiana, aged eighteen years, eight months and ten days.

Sister Emma was one of the leading officers in the Temperance Council at this place. She had never attached herself to the church, but on her death-bed regretted that she had not done so, and exhorted her sisters to unite with it at once. She was pronounced to death. She was one of the best girls I ever knew—always of a mild, sweet temper. She was reared by a devoted Christian mother.

In her death the Temperance Council has lost one of its best members. She is greatly missed in the circle of young ladies. She died just two weeks before her father. On her death-bed she said that she would die first after her father's death. We have bright hopes of meeting her in heaven.

W. D. STAYTON.

DIED, near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, August 17, 1872, of congestion of the lungs, Mrs. CASSY FARRER, wife of S. D. Farrer, and daughter of John and Catherine Wallis. She was born in York district, South Carolina, October 28, 1808, and was married to S. D. Farrer, in Lauderdale county, Alabama, in 1826. She was the mother of thirteen children, only six surviving her. Her sickness was short—was taken on Tuesday and died on Saturday following. She was delirious from the time danger was apprehended, hence she left no dying testimony. But from her Christian walk through life her friends have a comfortable hope that she has reached the better land in safety. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for thirty years. She was an affectionate wife and mother. May her aged husband and her children and grandchildren so live that they will have a glorious meeting on the sunny banks of the New Jerusalem.

BRO. ELIAS BROWN died, at his residence in Enterprise, Mississippi, at ten o'clock A. M. on November 10, 1872.

The subject of this memoir was born in the State of Georgia, March 7, 1807. Many years ago he emigrated to this State, and for several years he has been a citizen of Enterprise. In the year 1865 he made a profession of religion and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From that time to his death his walk and conversation was that of a Christian in whom there was no guile. Soon after he attached himself to the church he was elected a steward, in which office he always tried to discharge his duty, frequently giving more than others thought he should.

Bro. Brown was a man of unflinching integrity and of great firmness, but unobtrusive, of few and well ordered words, and in many respects very retiring and timid. As a member of the church he was always where duty called him, unless providentially hindered, and ever ready to show his faith by his works. He was one of the most charitable men I ever knew; and to know and appreciate his worth as a citizen, as a Christian, as a friend, and his acts of charity, it was necessary to be long and intimately acquainted with him. He left a widow and many relatives, and also numerous intimate friends, who feel as the psalmist did when he said: "Lover and friend hast thou put far from me."

W. SPILLMAN.

DIED, in Copiah county, Mississippi, at the residence of her brother, Isham Beasley, Sister ELIZA PENNINGTON, aged sixty-eight years.

Sister Pennington was born in South Carolina, and emigrated with her father to Mississippi when young. She was raised by Methodist parents, and when about fifteen or sixteen years old she joined the Methodist Church, and shortly after embraced religion. She was twice married, but she died a widow, leaving two children—a son and daughter—to mourn her loss.

Sister Pennington was truly a Christian. Her holy, upright walk and her daily conversation all went to prove that she loved and served the Lord. At church she would often shout the praise of God. It was her great delight to meet with the people of God at his holy sanctuary, when able. For three or four years she was greatly afflicted with that dreadful disease—consumption—which took her off. When she could no longer visit the church she would ask her brethren to hold prayer meetings with her. She loved to be with Christians, to sing and pray with them. Oftentimes have we seen her happy, and heard her shout the high praises of the Lord. She was a great sufferer, but she bore all her suffering with patience. She was completely resigned to her Heavenly Father's will, and would often say she wanted to depart and be with the Lord, where there is no more pain or suffering. On the morning of the fifteenth of August, 1872, she quietly fell asleep in the arms of her Savior—bid farewell to earth without a groan or struggle, died in peace with the Lord, and man, and went to her great reward above.

Sister Pennington has left an affectionate daughter behind; but it will not be long before Sister Sarah will shake hands with that loving mother again. May God bless the dear child, and all her dear relations, brothers and sisters. May they all so live as to be ready when death comes, as was Sister Eliza.

OUR WEE WHITE ROSE.

BY GERALD MASSEY.

All in our marriage garden
Grew, smiling up to God,
A bonnier flower than ever
Sucked the green warmth of the sod.
Oh! beautifully, unfathomably
Its little life unfurled:
Life's crown of sweetness was our wee
White Rose of all the world.

From out a gracious bosom
Our bud of beauty grew;
It fed on smiles for sunshine,
And tears for dafatter dew.
Ay, nestling warm and tenderly,
Our leaves of love were curled
So close and close about our wee
White Rose of all the world.

With mystical, faint fragrance
Our house of life she filled—
Revealed each hour some fairy tower,
Where winged hopes might build.
We saw—though none like us might see—
Such precious promised pearled
Upon the petals of our wee
White Rose of all the world.

But evermore the halo
Of angel-light increased;
Like the mystery of moonlight
That holds some fairy feast.
Snow-white, snow-soft, snow silently,
Our darling bud unfurled,
And dropped in the grave—God's lap—our wee
White Rose of all the world.

Our Rose was but in blossom,
Our life was but in spring,
When down the solemn midnight
We heard the spirits sing.
"Another bud of infancy,
With holy dews impearled;"
And in their hands they bore our wee
White Rose of all the world.

You scarce could think so small a thing
Could leave a loss so large:
Her little light such shadow fling
From dawn to sunset's marge.
In other springs our life may be
In bannered bloom unfurled,
But never, never match our wee
White Rose of all the world.

OLD AGE.

BY REV. EDWARD P. INGERSOLL.

Through the past weeks we have had the "mellow autumn days;" to some "the sweetest of the year." Why should not the time of fruit-gathering be better than the time of blossoms? So I look upon a righteous old age compared with sunny youth. If the cold winter of annihilation or endless decay were to claim the love of the aged saint, then were youth better than age. But though old, he is a child, just getting through with his school-life, and making ready to go home. His failing senses are but the taking down of the tabernacle, that he may go up into the temple. The life which is in Christ is an anthem, which grows stronger and sweeter to its close.

Why is such an old age a time of peculiar blessedness? Because it is a time of rich memories. Childhood lives upon anticipations. The youth looks forward. As to this life, the old man looks backward. His best memories are not of the sports of his early childhood, because he counts the virtue of the heart more than the innocency of the limb. "The path of the just is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." To the aged saint, then, the richest memories, the happiest associations, are after the new birth. Then old things are passed away; then really begins his life of sweet memories. He thinks of the time before, but only as steps that led him up to God. He remembers his faithful father and praying mother. He remembers his conversion and early experiences. He reviews his struggles and his victories. He recalls the times of refreshing from God, when the voice of the minister was tender, and the church bowed herself humbly, and souls were won to Christ. He loves to go back to the prayer meeting and the Lord's table, and feel again the communion of saints. He calls about him the noble ones that stood shoulder to shoulder with him under the banner of the cross; he remembers how they "took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company." Such sacred memories come clustering to his mind and give him gladness. Time gives grace and richness to pure memories, and so he who can run back threescore years and find Jesus the hope and rest of his early life, will find him now the most precious crown.

Because it is a time of special solicitude, not solicitude in the sense of a harassing concern of mind. One feels solicitude when his friend is sick, or he seeks to reap success. It is a trembling between hope and fear. The solicitude of the devout patriarch is for the glory of God's kingdom. He has trod the deceitful paths of youth. He knows its quicksands and its pitfalls, its false lights and vain ambitions. His solicitude is that men may see the dangers of the way, forsake self, and live for Christ.

He has seen maturer life chasing the same delusive phantoms; a little sobered by experience, but with stronger step pressing the highway toward earthly honors. He has seen them fall, immolated upon perishing altars, and what wonder he has solicitude?

You can find no such deep, tender desire for souls as among the fathers and mothers of Israel.

Are not such solicitudes a delight to Christian hearts? They are only a burden when the wings of faith are too weak to lift them and place them upon the bosom of the Redeemer.

Another legacy to old age! It is a time for gratitude and trust. For what shall the young man be grateful who "carves his own fortune?" Why shall he have trust who has "gained success, and asked favor of nobody?" But the old man of faith has gained an eminence from which he looks back and sees, at a glance, all the way in which God has led him.

Experiences have taught him man's weakness and God's strength. Communion with his Savior has opened his eyes, and lo! the mountain round about is "full of horses and chariots of fire." I never saw an aged saint who did not love that grand old hymn:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord."

And especially that verse which ends:

"And then, when gray hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

'Tis the nature of grace to ripen the heart for thanksgiving and praise, and fix firmly the trust in him who has been an unchangeable Friend in this changeable world.

Another crown of a saintly old age! It is a time of hope. "At evening time there shall be light."

Not the hope of fame, for that lies buried in the past. Now it is no longer "castles in the air," but "mansions in the skies." Imagination has lost its earthly wings, and is plumed with the heavenly. What if the fourscore years, whose strength is labor and sorrow, shall come? There is ample support to the aged Christian. No matter what troubles life brings, a man draws comfort from that which is his treasure. Let a miser lose his friends, his health, his honor, yet, while his gold lasts, he will bear up under his reverses. Let a voluptuary be robbed of his estate, his credit, his good name, yet for the time he will revel in his treasure. Other afflictions may raze the surface, but do not strike to the heart of his enjoyment. So will it be with a virtuous old age. Friends may be called away, but they are "treasures laid up in heaven." Grief and affliction may come, but

"Hope wipes the tear from sorrow's eye,
And faith looks upward to the sky."

Sometimes these patriarchs reach forward with such aspirations that they seem to us even now to be in heavenly places. Their souls have outgrown the narrow limits of time, and reach over into eternity.

Infancy, with its sweet smiles and little winning words and ways, is beautiful to the eye of sense. It raises fond anticipations in loving hearts, but often, often they are sadly blighted. A righteous old age, not so pleasing, perhaps, in its outward form, is a life that we may look upon with full, fond hope, because it is filled with full, fond hope. No doubts, no forebodings now; the future is all glory. 'Tis a beautiful sight when a little boat glides out upon a summer's sea, its tiny sails filled with favoring breezes; but 'tis a grander one when, deep-laden with the gold and spices of a far-off clime, worn and battered, but still staunch, the great ship moves steadily in toward the haven. The one is childhood; the other a righteous old age.

One other peculiar blessing for old age. It is a time when man may give strongest testimony for Christ.

A young soldier listens calmly to the counsel of the veteran. So do young believers love to sit at the feet of Christian veterans. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." It seems to be just such a crown to every earnest young Christian. When an aged patriarch says, "Hear what the Lord has done for me," I sit as a little child at his feet. If our fathers and mothers in the church would tell us not only of what God hath wrought, but more of what God hath wrought in them, I believe it would be for great strength to the church. Happy he who grows old with Christ as his portion, for he is ever renewing his youth. He dies, like Moses upon the mount, in full view of the promised land.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE TWO TYNDALLS.

The patronymic of Tindal, Tyndale or Tyndalls, first made famous in the world by the pioneer translator of the Bible into the English tongue, is revived again with much eclat in this nineteenth century by Prof. James Tyndall, LL. D. and F. R. S., whose lectures on science are of world-wide reputation. The first of these two eminent Tyndalls delved in the mine of revelation, the other does so in the mine of physical knowledge. In some points of character they are alike; as in wealth of mental endowments, love of learning, vigor of resolution and utter reserve in the utterance of their convictions. But as to their religious status, and in respect to all the cardinal tenets of our revealed faith, they are as far asunder as the northern and southern poles. William Tyndall spent his entire life in the toilsome, hazardous, but most noble work of filling England with the Bible. John Tyndall, on the other hand, is openly, and apparently with much zest, casting the great weight of his name and pen on the side of those engaged in the misanthropic work of emptying England of the Bible. In this thing they are the antipodes of each other.

William Tyndall saw all man's best good, as well as England's highest glory, linked indissolubly with the Bible, and its spread among the people. And to one who said to him, "We had better be without God's laws than the Pope's," he indignantly replied: "I defy the Pope and all his laws; and if God give me life, ere many years the plow-boys shall know more of the Scriptures than you do." With such a spirit he could not long be hid from the persecution; and in 1526 he became an exile from his native land, which he was never more to see. Basely entrapped on the Continent, he was imprisoned for two years, and then executed. His last words were: "Lord, open the King of England's eyes!"

In quaint verse he said of himself:

"Though I am old, clothed in barbarous weed,
Nothing garnished with gay eloquency,
Yet I tell the truth, if ye list to take heed,
Against their froward, furious frenzy,
Which reckon it for a great heresy,
And unto lay people grievous outrage,
To have God's word in their native language."

And another quaintly wrote of him:

"Rome thundered death, but Tyndall's dauntless eye
Looked in death's face and smiled, death staadlag by;
In spite of Rome, for England's faith he stood,
And in the flames he sealed it with his blood."

And he wrote home that if the King would only suffer the circulation of the bare text of the Bible among the people, he would immediately repair to England, and there "offer his body to suffer what pains and tortures—yea, what death—his majesty would."

Now, turning again to John Tyndall, though we may find him with a Bible in his house, or even in his hand, and hear of him possibly as a church-goer, yet when he steps out of his way, as a scientific lecturer, to assault the whole theory of scriptural miracles, and argues against prayer for any effect, or even in natural providence, as the baldest of scientific absurdities, he sets himself in deadly array against the Bible, and expends his might in weakening England's and the world's confidence in it. How gross is his ridicule of an Old Testament miracle in his saying that "the idea that the Builder and Sustainer of all should contract himself to a burning bush, or behave in other familiar ways, is astounding to the scientific man." And it is to the Bible that he refers when he speaks of the "credulous prattle of the ancients about miracles." And in regard to prayer, his disbelief in it is none the less outspoken and decided. So that no one can adopt his tenets on these points without an utter loss of all trust in the Bible as the revealed word of God to man, and a letting drop of the most distinctive belief and practices of a Christian life. John Tyndall laughs at the book of miracles which William Tyndall spent his life in translating into English, that the plow-boys might read it; and pities the medieval ignorance of the man who prostrates himself before Heaven in request or thanks for his daily bread, or who begs the life of a darling child in the grasp of the croup, or in the burning furnace of a fever. He grants that we may pray emotionally. By which he means, for the sake of the effect of the prayer upon our own feelings. But aside from that he seeks to explode the whole theory of it, as the blankest nonsense, an anachronism in an age like ours, and on its way to extinction. And he takes special pains to have these jeers of Christian truth and duty bound up in the same volume with his short lectures upon science, as if thereby the better to insure their circulation among the masses, and to gain an apparent indorsement of them from the very halls of science themselves.

Of such a course of conduct, whatever else we may say, this at least is not invidious, that it is the very reverse of the animus and life of his famous namesake, William. The one aimed to get the Bible into England; the other seems to be aiming to get it out of England and the world. The one looked upon all nature, physical as well as spiritual, as the legitimate realm of God's constant work. The other takes all physical nature, at least, out of the hands of God's personal agency, and tries to tie it fast with the cords of fate, or enwraps it in the network of self-moved laws, energies or forces.—Rev. John G. Hall, in the Advance.

Mr. Evan Evans, of Charleston, South Carolina, says the cultivation of sea-island cotton has become so precarious from uncertainty of labor and want of capital that it must be superseded by some other crop.

INFANTICIDE IN CHINA.

Much has been told by missionaries and travelers of the prevalence of infanticide in China. Their accounts, however, deal in generalities and estimates, rather than in particulars, and, although they are of the most painful character, fall short of giving an adequate conception of the extent to which the horrible practice is carried. The Count de Beauvoir, a Frenchman, who had never believed the accounts published by the missionaries on the subject, has had them fully confirmed to him by personal observation. He publishes in his Voyage Autour du Monde statements of particulars and figures which set forth the atrocity with realistic distinctness, and establish its prevalence to an extent which had hardly been more than hinted at. As the count and his companions were returning in haste one evening from the cemetery to Canton, they discovered a bag containing a newborn infant, which had been thrown from the wall upon the ground. They were directed by cries to another child in the agonies of death; and along the pathway they were following they found, in a quarter of an hour, seven infants, "all frozen," not one whose life it was possible to save. The count confesses that he had believed "in isolated cases, such as occur among ourselves. In my ignorance I regarded it as a question of the Chinese assizes, exploite in Europe, and exaggerated by the missionary priests and Sisters of Charity; but considering what we saw in our first chance walk in the environs of Canton, I am not surprised that the Annals of the Propagation of the Faith give twenty-five thousand as the average per annum of children thus abandoned in the great centers of Chinese population."

The next day they visited the nursery of the mission, where they saw, in one room, two hundred and fifty infants, the result of one week's labor in the task of rescue by the Sisters of Charity. The sisters were at the time removing many corpses from among the number who had a chance of life. The number of nuns is not sufficient for the task. The proportion of female to male children gathered up by them is ninety in a hundred. The work of collecting is done very systematically. Every morning a body of Christian Chinese women, brought up by the sisters, set out in couples, carrying basket-hods on their backs, exactly like the Parisian chiffonnieres.

An Ancient Humorist.—Hierocles, who lived in the sixth century, collected twenty-one jests under the general title of the Pedants, and in this fossil jest book we find jokes that have been handed down through succeeding collections, and have become old and familiar friends. Among these ancient jests is the account of a man who, for fear of drowning, determined not to enter the water until he was master of the art of swimming; of the man who complained that his horse had died just as he had taught it to live without food; of the philosopher who carried a stone about with him as a specimen of his house; of one who stood before the glass with his eyes shut to see how he looked when he was asleep; of the man who bought a crow to see if it would live two hundred years; and of one who went into a hot on horseback, because he was in a hurry. Here we find the ever-new story of a man who, meeting a friend, asked whether it was he or his brother who was buried; and the blundering excuse of the person who, not having attended to the request of a friend, said when he met him: "I'm sorry I never received the letter which you wrote to me about the books."

In Scotland they have narrow open ditches, called sheep-drains. A man was riding a donkey one day across a sheep-pasture, and when the donkey came to a sheep-drain he would not go over it. So the man rode him back a short distance, and turned him around, and put the whip to him, thinking, of course, that the donkey, going so fast, would jump the drain before he ever knew it. But not so. On they came, and when the donkey got to the drain he stopped all of a sudden, and the man went over Mr. Jack's head. No sooner had he touched the ground than he got up, and, looking the donkey straight in the face, he said: "Very weel pitched. But then how are ye going to get over yersel?"

A Noteworthy Record.—The Sandwich Island Friend says that the missionaries of Micronesia have performed and published the results of more explorations in the Pacific ocean than have been made by the British navy since the days of Captains Cook and Vancouver, and by the United States navy since the days of Commodore Wilkes. And yet the entire expense of the Micronesia mission, including the running of the missionary ship, the Morning Star, up to 1870, would not exceed $150,000.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Boston City Missionary Society, aroused to the demands of the neglected parts of the city, have planned the building of a number of Methodist chapels, and a meeting was held in Tremont Temple, during the visit of Bishop Simpson, to solicit subscriptions for the carrying out of the project. After an eloquent sermon from the Bishop, the collection was taken toward initiating the enterprise, and $6,000 were at once contributed.

The English Independent notices what it denominates "a healthy change," at a late session of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. That body strongly urged upon all the office-bearers and members of the church the propriety of discountenancing the drinking customs which prevailed, and more especially the practice of drinking and toasting at ordination services, and of drinking at funerals. The recommendation has been observed at many ordination services.

The Michigan Classis of the Reformed Church, at its last meeting, earnestly discussed the vice of profane swearing, now so fearfully prevalent, and passed the following among other wholesome resolutions:

Resolved, That we will do all we can individually, by the use of sermons, cards, tracts, papers, books and conversation, and by our influence and our prayers, to lessen, if not remove, this vice from the neighborhoods, towns and cities in which we live.

From statistics recently collected and published by Baboo T. C. Mitter, of Hoogly, India, it appears that the number of native Christian communicants in North India has more than doubled since the publication of Dr. Mullins' statistics in 1861. The total number of communicants reported is 13,908, with a Christian community of no less than 48,591 souls. The number of Protestant native Christians in India, Burmah and Ceylon is estimated at 300,000. These statistics are an effectual answer to those who are decrying the work of missions as fruitless.

A rare occurrence in the annals of the Roman Catholic episcopacy has just occurred in Austria, namely, the resignation of the Bishop of Laybach. The step taken by Mgr. Widmer dates from 1869. Foreseeing that the dogma of infallibility would be adopted by the council at the Vatican, and not wishing to subscribe to that innovation, he asked to be relieved from his ecclesiastical functions. The resignation has, however, only now been accepted by the Pope. There are at present two sees vacant in Austria—those of Laybach and of St. Hippolyte.

A correspondent says: The last new religious wonder in New York is the new church of St. Bartholomew. It puts all the fine churches of the city into the shade. It is radiant with gold and crimson. The leading pews were knocked off at auction last week, $4,500 being the leading figure. It would be a burlesque to put over the door of that church: "To the poor the gospel is preached." "Why don't you bid off one of our high pews?" said an earnest vestryman to a New York merchant. "I bought a farm the other day for less than what you ask for one of those little pews," was the answer.

At the recent autumnal meetings of the Baptist Union of England, statistics were read showing that the number of Baptist churches had increased during the present century nearly five-fold, or as twenty-one to one hundred, while the population of the country had increased only three-fold; also that, while at the beginning of the century there were about thirty thousand members of Baptist churches, and every two hundred and seventieth man or woman was a Baptist, there are now nearly one hundred and eighty thousand members, and every one hundred and twentieth man or woman is a member of a Baptist church.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago have entered upon a form of Christian effort eminently simple and inexpensive, and yet highly promising in its results. We refer to what it terms its "depot work." Some six months ago twenty boxes or racks were placed in the waiting rooms of different depots, and have from that time been kept constantly supplied with religious papers, books and tracts illustrated, for the use of persons detained it waiting, and which may be borne away by them to be read elsewhere. About five thousand pages daily of religious reading have been thus sent forth to do their silent work in turning the thoughts of the traveler and depot frequenters to the concerns of the soul.—Church and State.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts is the oldest missionary organization in England, having been organized under a royal charter from William the Third, in 1701. Its leading objects are to provide for the ministrations of the Church of England in the British colonies, and to propagate the gospel among the native inhabitants of those countries. The original design of the formation of colonial churches has been changed to a more general missionary work, in which it has been very successful. It was under the patronage of this society that John Wesley entered upon his mission work in Georgia. Its principal missions now are in Canada, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, British Columbia, West Indies, Africa, India and Australia, and in all of them, according to the society's annual report, prosperity had been enjoyed during the past year. The publications of the society are the Mission Field, Gospel Missionary and the Net, all of which are ably edited, and contain a great amount of missionary information. The income of the society for the past year was £97,603.

The Lucknow Witness says that "Mr. Taylor's work in Bombay still goes steadily, although quietly, forward. It is not to be expected that a movement of this kind will secure much attention from the outside world, but occasional notices in the papers show that Bombay is becoming aware that the late revival has gained a permanent lodgment in her midst. Whatever these revivals may be, it is evident that they cannot be killed with contempt nor driven away by ridicule, and that they do in some way gain a most tenacious hold on the community. The Bombay correspondent of the Pioneer has more than once borne valuable testimony to the wide influence of Mr. Taylor's work, and although apparently a little ashamed of the qualified approval which he gives to the preacher and his work, his letters are none the less significant as showing the actual progress of a new religious power in the community. It is especially noted that the natives are reached by the revival, and that a number have been baptized."

The report of the London Missionary Society says: "If any friend of the society should inquire whether we have a religion suitable for the Hindoos, he would find a clear and decided answer to his question in the numerous reports which have been received from the brethren in India. The preaching of the gospel in the vernacular tongues of the inhabitants forms a prominent feature in the labors of the missionaries in every center of our Indian missions, and it is carried on with ability, perseverance and care by many of the brethren under great discouragements. Educational establishments on a large scale are also conducted by the missionaries, in which sound religious instruction is given in addition to secular knowledge. Many converts, of decided convictions and strong faith, and patience in suffering, have been drawn from these institutions. Female education is also attended to with increased assiduity, and hundreds of Hindoo ladies and their children are under instruction in Zenana schools in different places."

Immersion.—During the proceedings of the Southern Synod of Kentucky, recently, a complaint was tried against the action of West Lexington presbytery in licensing a candidate who stated that he might, under certain circumstances, baptize by immersion, brought up the question whether a Presbyterian minister has a right to baptize by immersion. When it came to the vote, two voted for sustaining the complaint in whole, twenty-four for sustaining in part, and thirteen for not sustaining. The following minute was afterward adopted: "The synod intend by their vote to sustain in part the complaint against West Lexington presbytery, meaning simply to condemn any and all action on the part of presbytery which might seem to countenance the right of ministers of our church in any case to administer baptism by immersion." On this question the rules of the Church North seem to allow ministerial liberty. The constitution says: "Dipping of the person into the water is not necessary, but baptism is rightly administered by pouring or sprinkling water upon the person."—New York Observer.

"Read an Hour a Day.—There was a lad who, at fourteen, was apprenticed to a soap dealer. One of his resolutions was to read an hour a day, or at least at that rate, and he had an old silver watch, left him by his uncle, which he timed his reading by. He stayed seven years with his master, and it was said when he was twenty-one he knew as much as the young squire did. Now let us see how much time he had to read in, in seven years, at the rate of one hour a day. It would be two thousand five hundred and fifty-five hours, which, at the rate of eight hours a day, would be equal to three hundred and ten days; equal to forty-five weeks; nearly a year's reading. That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge would pile up a very large store. I am sure it is worth trying for. Try what you can do. Begin now. In after years you will look back upon the task as the most pleasant and profitable you ever performed.—Guiding Star.

GOD WITH US.

The virgin-born child was called Emmannel—God with us—by prophetic inspiration, and the fulfillment is announced in the gospel history of the advent. Such was the rightful title of the babe before whom the wise men from the East bowed, and to whom their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh were offered. God with us as he had never been before; the word made flesh and dwelling among us; a God-man—the divine and the human united. Divine condescension and our own exaltation and glory are expressed in this surpassingly wonderful event. This assumption of our nature was the pledge and assurance of God's mercy and love to the world. It was the supreme act by which he intervened for our welfare and salvation. He is not a cold, impersonal mystery, but the Father and Friend of man, identifying himself with human affairs and interests, and drawing us to himself by the closest and most indissoluble ties. The union of God and man in Christ is never to be broken. On earth, in heaven, through all eternity Christ is God with us.

God had not been so with us until this Christian era began. He is not so with any other order of intelligences in the universe, "for verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." The incarnation was a startling epoch in the universal realm of God, a wonder to the oldest seraph, and without precedent in the annals of eternity. It is the singular distinction of the human family that God has come closer to it, and made himself more of it than of all other orders of intelligent beings. The end of this mighty condescension as seen in redemption, equals the fact of the incarnation. It was to save that God became man, took upon him the form of a servant, and was found in fashion as a man. God with us, as a Savior, is the highest import of Emmanuel. And from this central thought of wisdom and love we move out in every direction with the assurance that man is nowhere left to himself.

He who was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, is also in Christ in the material world, in the providence which watches the sparrow and counts the hairs of our head, and in all the experiences of life. With us is something more than for us, as it indicates the grand expedient by which our salvation has been achieved, and as it describes the mystery of mysteries—God manifested in the flesh. Our conceptions of Christ have this peculiar and consolatory character. He is not only enlisted for us, but with us and of us—"made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." God with us on the first Christmas morning as he had not been with us in Abraham's and David's time, and as he never was and never will be with the angels of heaven. It ought to be a joy to men that God has thus come down to them, and that in this most wonderful manner he dwells among them.

Weakness and guilt are the common lot, and sorrow and death are in every path. But if God is with us, even the strong God, if "he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows," we may well put on a cheerful courage. Let us apply the returning day of Christian gladness, with all its broad and glorious associations, to our personal comfort. Let us think of him who came, in the humble garb of a peasant child, as our Emmanuel. God with us to meet the demands of justice and to atone for our sins; God with us as our Advocate and great High Priest in heaven; and God with us in overcoming the world, and in pressing up through earthly mists and clouds to the heights of heaven. It will chasten and at the same time increase our joy if we carry this utterance with us through the season of gayety. God with us—let us keep with God. It will then be a time of cheerfulness and pleasure, without the unseemly stains and sacrilegious blots of intemperate levity and foolish dissipation.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

THE CLOSE.

The services on Sunday were confined to the Presbyterian church. Appointments were announced for the academy and the courthouse, but the rain which set in on Saturday continued and rendered them impracticable. In the morning at nine o'clock Rev. W. E. M. Linfield delivered a capital address to the Sunday school, which made a decided impression upon the old and the young. Bishop Kavanaugh preached one of his great and comprehensive gospel sermons at eleven o'clock—by the watch the longest sermon we ever listened to, being one hour and thirty-five minutes in the delivery; but one of the shortest, as far as consciousness of passing time is any indication. There was enough scriptural truth and spiritual food in it to feed and save a whole world. Some of the people here, we are informed, never saw or heard a Methodist Bishop before, but now they have both seen and heard. After the sermon the following persons were ordained deacons: Thomas B. Walden, Hiram Rivers Singleton, James S. Parker, David P. Bradford, Edward Hicks, Abner Ward, Benjamin D. Sellers, James J. Smylie, Robert J. Hopkins, William D. Dominick and Joseph B. K. Smith.

In the afternoon at three o'clock the editor of the Advocate preached, after which the following persons were ordained elders: Lyman Carley, Warren C. Black and Oliver H. P. Davis. At night Rev. James A. Godfrey preached a practical and profitable discourse, and with it closed the Conference Sabbath. It rained all the time, but in spite of mud and water the church was well filled at each hour. The Brandon people are ahead of any we know of in going to church on a rainy day. Their religion, we judge, is not of the fair weather sort.

On Monday the Conference was chiefly occupied with reports from the committees. The Joint Board of Finance reported amount apportioned to the Conference for the support of the Bishops, $1,450; amount collected, $1,532.75. Amount necessary to meet the claims of the widows, orphans and superannuates, $4,200; amount collected, $2,222.05, leaving a deficit of $1,977.95. The report on Sunday schools showed improvement in this branch of church work. Dr. J. W. Harmon was recommended as agent. The report on education, prepared and read by Dr. W. H. Watkins, was one of the best—strong, comprehensive and to the point. Centenary was ably represented by President Andrews, who stated that ninety students had matriculated since the first of October. President Johnson, of Whitworth, represented that institution as enjoying great prosperity. In the report on missions and its discussion an item was brought out which was new to us. It appears that chiefly within the limits of the Brandon and Meridian districts are three thousand Choctaw Indians, needing the ministrations of the gospel. Rev. John A. Vance gave a most interesting account of these red men, and Conference has asked the Bishops and Missionary Board to send them some Indian missionaries from the Indian Mission Conference.

On Tuesday the Conference sat from nine until four o'clock, and concluded its business. The rain still continued, but the audience was large and patient. A resolution was passed instructing the Conference Missionary Board to conform the appropriations to the money raised, and the examining committees and undergraduates were required hereafter to be at the seat of the Conference on Tuesday morning before the time of the session. The preachers in charge of works were required to furnish the Joint Board of Finance a list of the claimants in the Conference and a statement of their condition. Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicut presented the report of the Committee on Religious Literature—a report which showed careful preparation and presenting the publishing interest with great clearness. The New Orleans Christian Advocate was noticed in flattering terms, and resolutions were adopted to give it a hearty support. The venerable Rev. J. G. Jones was formally requested, by a rising vote, to write the history of Methodism in Mississippi. Resolutions of thanks to the people for their abundant hospitality, to the Presbyterians for the use of their church, to the parish authorities for the use of the courthouse, to the railroads for half fare, and to Colonel A. J. Frantz, editor and proprietor of the Brandon Republican, who had issued a daily containing the Conference proceedings, and supplied the members with copies of the same. The people were so well pleased with the Conference that they determined to have it again next year, and arguing that the bad weather, epizootic and unfinished condition of the Methodist church had not given them half a chance to enjoy or to entertain the Conference. If anybody cared to resist public opinion, it was evidently useless, and so by a unanimous vote Brandon was fixed as the place for the next session. The business being done, and the minutes read up, the Bishop conducted the services of reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer, and, after an appropriate and stirring talk, announced the appointments at four o'clock P. M., December 17.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

Mr. Editor: I arrived here yesterday from Bryan, the seat of the Texas Conference, in company with Dr. McFerrin. We shall leave this afternoon for Indianola, and thence for Victoria, the seat of the West Texas. The good people of Bryan entertained the Conference most hospitably. They gave us good collections for the Preachers' Aid Society ($2,200) and for the Mission Society (over $1,100.) All paid—no "futures." It is easy to see in this the additional spring from the presence of the missionary secretary. He is looking remarkably well, is well dressed, and was never more himself. The whole church will be delighted to hear also that Dr. Alexander was among us, looking at first to be in much feebleness, but by the time the session was closing he had greatly improved in health and spirits, and was almost ready to take work. His friends are all over the South, and many prayers sustain him both in body and in spirit. Here, too, were the toil-worn veterans, who have borne the burden and heat of the day in the spreading of Methodism over this once waste and wilderness region of the Southwest. They give weight and quality to the deliberations of the Conference, and are its "crown of glory."

Six young men were received on trial—Alney M. Newman, John T. Williamson, Samuel A. Whipple, Melville C. Field and Samuel H. Brown. Walter S. South was readmitted. Philmer C. Archer, E. D. Pitts, Seaborn J. Graves and S. C. Littlepage were received by transfer from other Conferences. John F. Wohlschlegel was received into full connection from the Evangelical Lutheran Church. You will see by the appointments that three were discontinued, and four located at their own request. So we lost nearly as many as we gained.

The wear and tear of a Conference during the course of ten years is immense. How few, comparatively, of those who start hold on. Not a few local preachers move to Texas from the older States, and think that under new circumstances and in a new field they may venture to become itinerants. But it is more difficult to itinerate here than in the comfortable and crowded population of other States; and one who has spent a large part of his life in the calling of a local preacher finds it hard to do the whole work of a pastor—to remain away from home for weeks together, and run the narrow risk of support, which make up the glowing horizon of a veteran itinerant. There is too much of cloud-land in this inheritance of the saints. They therefore wheel round a few times, and then settle heavily down. The work proper of a local preacher is necessary to our system, but it is quite distinct from that of the true itinerant. Without local preachers it would be difficult in some places for itineracy to succeed. They go together, and never better than when distinctly separate. The whole work in Texas is greatly damaged by a sort of admixture of the two. Traveling preachers are agents, farmers, patentees, common school teachers, shop-keepers, and occasionally run a saw mill. One brother whom I stationed, as the only available man, kept store, practiced physic, ran a mill, and was "very acceptable." The many-sidedness of our economy was never more severely tested than in stationing some of these universal geniuses. The Lord give them many graces, and much grace for their many callings! The people, however, thirst for the word, and are willing to swallow the comb for the sake of the honey.

The outlook of this Conference territory, in a merely economical view, is all hopeful enough; but the spiritual condition of it calls for much earnest and prayerful attention upon the part of our preachers. The chance to make money, which seems to present itself in every developing country, is fraught with many temptations to both people and preachers; and unless these temptations to worldliness are watched and resisted they chill and lower the vitality of the church. Warmth of soul, true holiness of heart and life, courage in defense of the truth, and a single eye are demanded in no part of the South more than here. Methodism in its old, yes, its oldest, style of class meetings, love-feast and converting power is as well suited to Texas as Texas is to it. Our people can take the State more speedily by holiness of heart than by any other and all other methods of attack. Spirituality, the breath of Christ, is the breath of the church; it is the power of Horeb of its voice, of Sinai of its holy law, of the sepulcher of Arimathea its quickening spirit of holiness.

Next Conference at Austin. I send you a list of the appointments herewith. Yours, etc., K.

DR. HAMILTON.

The Tuskaloosa Times of December 4 says: "This able and distinguished divine, greatly to the delight of his own congregation, and of the community at large, has been stationed in this city for the next ecclesiastical year. At the earnest solicitation of his numerous friends and admirers he has consented to a transfer from the Alabama Conference, with which he is at present connected, to the North Alabama Conference, which closed its annual session in this city a few days ago. Dr. Hamilton is a rich acquisition to any community. As a theologian, pastor and pulpit orator he has few peers in his denomination in the South. His popularity in this community, his eminent abilities and capacity for usefulness, and his tireless labors in the cause of his Divine Master, known and admired by all, make his location in this city a matter of just felicitation. He is pre-eminently the right man in the right place, and our entire community extends to him the right hand of cordial welcome. We thank the Conference for the wise and most acceptable appointment."

Our home, during the Mississippi Conference, was with Colonel A. J. Frantz, the editor and proprietor of that old and excellent paper, the Brandon Republican. To him and his accomplished wife we were indebted for a most agreeable and generous hospitality. And indeed the whole Conference owe the colonel much for his helpfulness and considerate kindness.

We are greatly pained to learn that Mrs. Mary Gay, wife of Mr. Andrew H. Gay, died at the family residence, near Plaquemine, December 8. During an acquaintance of two years we had formed a high opinion of her intelligence, piety and great worth. An obituary of her will appear next week. We tender to the sorrowing ones our deepest sympathy in their great bereavement.

In giving liberal space, this week, to Conference proceedings, much other matter has been crowded out, among which is the correspondence from the Alabama Conference, which will appear next week.

Rev. Dr. Converse, Sr., editor of the Christian Observer, Louisville, Kentucky, died December 9. Dr. Converse was an able journalist and preacher, and universally loved and revered.

If God undertakes to provide for any one, the provision must of necessity be perfect. It is wholly impossible that God could omit any one thing needful. The poor, foolish heart may imagine a thousand wants; but God knows what we really want, and he will provide for all.

The Empress of Austria writes to a woman's club at Vienna: "Ladies, keep away from politics. There is nothing but misery in it."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18.—Hon. James Lynch, Secretary of State, died at his rosidenco in this city last night, of pneumonia.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The Herald publishes twelve columns abont Cuba. There are twelve thousand Cubans undor arms. They have plenty of ammunition, hut lack guns. Had they guns they would place forty thousand men in the field. The struggle will be prolonged unless outside parties interfere.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—The House of Representatives to-day, by a vote of 104 to 76, passed a resolution condemnatory of the course of Senator Sumner in introducing a bill in the United States Senate to remove all inscriptions relating to the rebellion from the army register and national regimental flags.

The Senate passed the resolution by a vote of 20 to 9.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Louisiana committee has determined to remain here a few days, in ordor to indorse the statement to the country which is in course of preparation. The committee are all well. They have little hope of success, except through Congress, and prompt action is not anticipated.

Major Edgar Seelye, special agent of the Postoffice Departmont, was to-day promoted by the Postmaster Gencral to the offico of assistant superintendent of railway mail service, with headquarters at New Orleans.

The Supreme Court had an informal consultation after the visit of the Louisiana delegation. Tho conclusion was that Judge Bradley could exercise his discretion about going to New Orleans.

Hon. James L. Orr, of South Carolina, has accepted the Russian mission, and expects to sail for Europe about the middle of January, though he prefers not to encounter the rigor of the climate of St. Petersburg until the middlo of March.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—George Palmer Putnam, the well-known publisher of this city, died suddenly this evening.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—The Central Presbyterian church, Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle, Brooklyn, burned this morning.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Tho Louisiana delegation held two meetings to-day, to considor the address drafted hy Judge Campbell, and adopted it with some slight modifications.

There is authority for stating that Judge Bradley does not now contemplate going to New Orleans; but this does not indicate that either he or other members of the Supreme Court approve the acts of usurpation in New Orleans.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—The fire in the Central Presbyterian Tahernacle originated in a flue. A strong gale prevailed, and the flames swept around the ceiling; the corrugated iron supports of the walls curled up. The mammoth jubilee organ was burned. The church was built in 1871, and was capable of seating four thousand people. Total loss, $25,000 to $30,000.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—Tho river Seine continues to rise, and in many places has overflowed its hanks.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Twenty-four hours rain storm has just ended. Large tracts in Leicestershiro are flooded. Thero is twelve inches of snow on the ground in Derbyshire.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—Provincial correspondence confirms the report of Bismarck's resignation of the premiership and his retention of the war office in tho Prussian cabinet.

The river Pregel and the hay adjoining Konigsburg is frozen over.

The Emperor grants Bismarck's request, and Von Roon acts provisionally as president of the Prussian ministry.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The late heavy storms have swollen the streams throughout England to a great height, and several of them have overflowed. Windsor and Eaton are flooded. The river Trent and its atfluents, the Locci and Dorwent, have overflowed their banks, submerging a large portion of country in Leicester and Nottingham. In some sections of these counties only the tops of the trees and hedges are visible. Heavy land slips have occurred near Dover, and railway communication with that town is interrupted.

The town of Peterborough, in Northampton county, is flooded, and many of the residents have been compelled to take refuge from the water in the upper stories of their dwellings.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The river Thames, which had already overflowed its banks at many places, suddonly rose nearly a foot to-day, and Windsor Home Park is one vast tank of water, and thousands of acres of other lands are submerged.

The present inundation of the Thames is the greatest since the flood of 1852.

WE HAVE before us a neatly-printed circular—"Blackmar's System of Easy Payments" for purchasers of pianos and organs—and, having carefully examined it, we think there is no longer any reason for those who wish to secure a good instrument to deny themselves the pleasure. Persons at a distance can send to Blackmar for this circular, and then select the style of piano they want, as Mr. Blackmar claims to have but one price, and will fill their orders as carefully as they could if they were here. HOLIDAY PRESENTS.—Messrs. Gaines & Relf, Nos. 127 and 129 Common street, have a magnificent stock of goods suitable for the holidays. To enumerate the variety of articles to be found at this establishment would require too much space. We refer our readers to the advertisement in another column, and advise them to call on Messrs. Gaines & Relf.

THE DENIZENS of the Fourth District will find the large and complete grocery establishment of Charles Hallejo, corner St. Charles and Jackson streets, a convenient and desirable place to make purchases. Mr. Hallejo has issued a very attractive catalogue of the various articles in his line, and will furnish one to each of his customers.

THE SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY.—To our readers in the country the advertisement of the Septoline Oil Company, No. 82 Camp street, will be found of especial interest. They have on hand a large stock of lamps, trimmings, oil, chandeliers, etc.; also an assortment of Japanned ware.

CHRISTMAS GOODS.—At the well-known up-town house of Braselman & Adams, corner of Magazine and St. Andrew streets, will be found a full and well-selected stock of goods suitable for holiday presents. Call and examine the stock.

GROCERIES.—At the well-known and extensive establishment of Hillman & Manard, 157 Poydras street, can be found an extensive stock of goods suitable for the holiday season. Dealers will do well to examine their stock.

REAL ESTATE BROKER.—We call the attention of those in want of real estate in city or country, or in need of the services of a real estate broker, to the advertisement of Charles H. Reed, No. 87 St. Charles street.

MESSRS. DAVIS & FRERET, 27 Commercial place, will give prompt attention to purchasing and selling property, collecting rents, etc. Sale Bulletin issued semi-monthly. See advertisement elsewhere.

DRUG STORE FOR SALE.—The drug store, corner of Canal and Magazine streets, is for sale. For terms apply to D. P. Albers, on the premises, or to A. G. Brice, Esq., 23 Commercial place.

WILCOX & GIBBS' CELEBRATED SEWING MACHINES.—M. S. Hedrick, 103 Canal street, is the agent of the above sewing machine in this city; also of Mme. Demorest's paper patterns.

PRACTICAL PAPER-HANGER.—T. J. Brown, No. 263 Camp street, gives personal attention to orders intrusted to him. See advertisement in another column.

GEORGE COATS, No. 168 Magazine street, is now ready to repair and remove iron safes, and does all kinds of repairing with neatness and dispatch.

RHEUMATISM.—Sufferers from this painful disease will observe with interest the advertisement of N. Jenkins, No. 100 Baronne street.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER offer a splendid array of holiday goods at 174 Canal street.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Dolhear College, 201 and 203 Canal street. dc12 3m

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A Warning.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

It Acts Like a Charm.—This is what we hear on all sides of Dr. TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. In cases of croup, bronchitis, asthma and all diseases it affords instant relief. It permeates the very substance of the lungs and causes them to throw off all acrid matter. It is very pleasant to the taste. Children take it readily.

NEW YORK, August 31, 1869.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Sir: When in Aiken, last winter, I used your Expectorant for my cough, and found more benefit from it than from any I have used. I took half a dozen bottles home with me, and have had to give some of it to my friends. Please send me one dozen by express C. O. D.

THE TABLES TURNED.

A SHORT STORY.

A GLOOMY DAY was the fifth of December, 1872; the atmosphere was murky and the rain drizzly; no "solitary horsemen" were to be seen, and the few pedestrians visible seemed to be "homeward wending their weary way;" the shops, including that great, big bee-hive, BRASELMAN & ADAMS' DRY GOODS STORE, corner of Magazine and St. Andrew streets—a rare sight—were almost deserted; the "Boss" looked gloomy, and the clerks—usually so bright—looked sleepy. All of a sudden a dozen of the latter were infused with inspiration, as it were, and in less time than it took to write this beautiful story the table containing the Fifteen Cent Calicoes was cleared, the Bit Calico was the next to be visited with this unaccountable mania, then came the turn of the table of Two Bit French Prints. What did it all mean? We see it now. The "Boss" is hard at work, too, but in among the splendid Dress Goods, first one piece comes out, then another and another, until the counter is piled high, and it seemed as if chaos had come again. Calling a few of his aids, they were soon busy scratching out the old marks and putting on new ones. Here we leave them for the night. Twelve hours supposed to have elapsed. Dropping in next morning, we found that the following order reigned in Warsaw: The Fifteen Cent Prints are now on the table with the Fifteen Cent Dress Goods, the Bit Prints repose on the table from whence were removed the Fifteen Centers, the French have superseded the Americans in possession of what was the Bit Table, and now comes the gist of the story. All the Dress Goods pulled out of shelves were Fifty and Sixty Cents per yard, and they now occupy a table to themselves, at the reduced price of Thirty-five Cents per yard; and this is the happy ending of "The Tables Turned."

The Child's Corner.

LETTER TO SANTA CLAUS.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

Blessed old Santa Claus! king of delights,
What are you doing these long winter nights?
Filling your budgets with trinkets and toys,
Wonderful gifts for the girls and the boys?
While you are planning for everything nice,
Pray, let me give you a bit of advice.

Don't take it hard, if I say in your ear:
Santa, I think you were partial last year;
Loading the rich folks with everything gay,
Snubbing the poor ones who came in your way;
Now, of all times in the year, I am sure,
This is the time to remember the poor.

Plenty of children there are in our city
Who have no fathers or mothers to pity;
Plenty of people whose working and needing
Scarcely can keep all their dear ones from needing.
Now, if I came every year in December,
They are the ones I would surely remember.

Once, on a beautiful Christmas, you know,
Jesus, our Savior, was born here below;
Patiently stooping to hunger and pain,
So he might save us, his lost ones, from shame;
Now, if we love him, he bids us to feed
All his poor brothers and sisters who need.

Blessed old Nick! I was sure, if you knew it,
You would remember and certainly do it;
This year, at least, when you empty your pack,
Pray give a portion to all who may lack.
Then, if you chance to have anything over,
Bring a small gift to your friend

KITTY CLOVER.

Little Corporal.

Tilly's Christmas.

BY LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

"I'm so glad to-morrow is Christmas, because I'm going to have lots of presents."

"So am I glad, though I don't expect any presents but a pair of mittens."

"And so am I; but I shan't have any presents at all."

As the three little girls trudged home from school they said these things, and as Tilly spoke both the others looked at her with pity and some surprise, for she spoke cheerfully, and they wondered how she could be happy when she was so poor she could have no presents on Christmas.

"Don't you wish you could find a purse full of money right here in the path?" said Kate, the child who was going to have "lots of presents."

"Oh, don't I, if I could keep it honestly!" and Tilly's eyes shone at the very thought.

"What would you buy?" asked Bessy, rubbing her cold hands and longing for her mittens.

"I'd buy a pair of large, warm blankets, a load of wood, a shawl for mother and a pair of shoes for me; and if there was enough left, I'd give Bessy a new hat, and then she needn't wear Ben's old felt one," answered Tilly.

The girls laughed at that; but Bessy pulled the funny hat over her ears, and said she was much obliged, but she'd rather have candy.

"Let's look, and may be we can find a purse. People are always going about with money at Christmas-time, and some one may lose it here," said Kate.

So, as they went along the snowy road, they looked about them, half in earnest, half in fun. Suddenly Tilly sprang forward, exclaiming:

"I see it! I've found it!"

The others followed, but all stopped disappointed; for it wasn't a purse; it was only a little bird. It lay upon the snow with its wings spread and feebly fluttering, as if too weak to fly. Its little feet were benumbed with cold; its once bright eyes were dull with pain, and instead of a blithe song it could only utter a faint chirp, now and then, as if crying for help.

"Nothing but a stupid old robin; how provoking!" cried Kate, sitting down to rest.

"I shan't touch it. I found one once, and took care of it, and the ungrateful thing flew away the minute it was well," said Bessy, creeping under Kate's shawl, and putting her hands under her chin to warm them.

"Poor little birdie! How pitiful he looks, and how glad he must be to see some one coming to help him! I'll take him up gently, and carry him home to mother. Don't be frightened, dear; I'm your friend;" and Tilly knelt down in the snow, stretching her hand to the bird with the tenderest pity in her face.

Kate and Bessy laughed.

"Don't stop for that thing; it's getting late and cold; let's go on and look for the purse," they said, moving away.

"You wouldn't leave it to die!" cried Tilly. "I'd rather have the bird than the money, so I shan't look any more. The purse wouldn't be mine, and I should only be tempted to keep it; but this poor thing will thank and love me, and I'm so glad I came in time."

Gently lifting the bird, Tilly felt its tiny cold claws cling to her hand, and saw its dim eyes brighten as it nestled down with a grateful chirp.

"Now I've got a Christmas present after all," she said smiling, as they walked on. "I always wanted a bird, and this one will be such a pretty pet for me."

"He'll fly away the first chance he gets, and die anyhow; so you'd better not waste your time over him," said Bessy.

"He can't pay you for taking care of him, and my mother says it isn't worth while to help folks that can't help us," added Kate.

"My mother says, 'Do as you'd be done by;' and I'm sure I'd like any one to help me if I was dying of cold and hunger. 'Love your neighbor as yourself' is another of her sayings. This bird is my little neighbor, and I'll love him and care for him, as I often wish our rich neighbor would love and care for us," answered Tilly, breathing her warm breath over the benumbed bird, who looked up at her with confiding eyes, quick to feel and know a friend.

"What a funny girl you are," said Kate; "caring for that silly bird, and talking about loving your neighbor in that sober way. Mr. King don't care a bit for you, and never will, though he knows how poor you are; so I don't think your plan amounts to much."

"I believe it, though; and shall do my part, any way. Good night. I hope you'll have a merry Christmas, and lots of pretty things," answered Tilly, as they parted.

Her eyes were full, and she felt so poor as she went on alone toward the little old house where she lived. It would have been so pleasant to know that she was going to have some of the pretty things all children love to find in their full stockings on Christmas morning. And pleasanter still to have been able to give her mother something nice. So many comforts were needed, and there was no hope of getting them, for they could barely get food and fire.

"Never mind, birdie, we'll make the best of what we have, and be merry in spite of everything. You shall have a happy Christmas, any way; and I know God won't forget us, if every one else does."

She stopped a minute to wipe her eyes, and lean her cheek against the bird's soft breast, finding great comfort in the little creature, though it could only love her, nothing more.

"See, mother, what a nice present I've found," she cried, going in with a cheery face that was like sunshine in the dark room.

"I'm glad of that, dearie; for I haven't been able to get my little girl anything but a rosy apple. Poor bird! Give it some of your warm bread and milk."

"Why, mother, what a big bowlful! I'm afraid you gave me all the milk," said Tilly, smiling over the nice, steaming supper that stood ready for her.

"I've had plenty, dear. Sit down and dry your wet feet, and put the bird in my basket on this warm flannel."

Tilly peeped into the closet and saw nothing there but dry bread.

"Mother's given me all the milk, and is going without her tea, 'cause she knows I'm hungry. Now I'll surprise her, and she shall have a good supper too. She is going to split wood, and I'll fix it while she's gone."

So Tilly put down the old teapot, carefully poured out a part of the milk, and from her pocket produced a great, plummy bun that one of the school children had given her, and she had saved for her mother. A slice of dry bread was nicely toasted, and the bit of butter set by for her to put on it. When her mother came in there was the table drawn up in a warm place, a hot cup of tea ready, and Tilly and birdie waiting for her.

Such a poor little supper, and yet such a happy one; for love, charity and contentment were guests there, and that Christmas eve was a blither one than that up at the great house, where lights shone, fires blazed, a great tree glittered, and music sounded, as the children danced and played.

"We must go to bed early, for we've only wood enough to last over to-morrow. I shall be paid for my work the day after, and then we can get some," said Tilly's mother, as they sat by the fire.

"If my bird was only a fairy bird, and would give us three wishes, how nice it would be! Poor dear, he can't give me anything; but it's no matter," answered Tilly, looking at the robin, who lay in the basket with his head under his wing, a mere little feathery bunch.

"He can give you one thing, Tilly—the pleasure of doing good. That is one of the sweetest things in life; and the poor can enjoy it as well as the rich."

As her mother spoke, with her tired hand softly stroking her little daughter's hair, Tilly suddenly started and pointed to the window, saying in a frightened whisper:

"I saw a face—a man's face—looking in! It's gone now; but I truly saw it."

"Some traveler attracted by the light, perhaps. I'll go and see." And Tilly's mother went to the door.

No one was there. The wind blew cold, the stars shone, the snow lay white on field and wood, and the Christmas moon was glittering in the sky.

"What sort of a face was it?" asked Tilly's mother, coming back.

"A pleasant sort of face, I think; but I was so startled I don't quite know what it was like. I wish we had a curtain there," said Tilly.

"I like to have our light shine out in the evening, for the road is dark and lonely just here, and the twinkle of our lamp is pleasant to people's eyes as they go by. We can do so little for our neighbors, I am glad to cheer the way for them. Now put these poor old shoes to dry, and go to bed, dearie; I'll come soon."

Tilly went, taking her bird with her to sleep in his basket near by, lest he should be lonely in the night.

Soon the little house was dark and still, and no one saw the Christmas spirits at their work that night.

When Tilly opened the door next morning she gave a loud cry, clapped her hands, and then stood still, quite speechless with wonder and delight. There, before the door, lay a great pile of wood, all ready to burn, a big bundle and a basket, with a lovely nosegay of winter roses, holly and evergreen tied to the handle.

"Oh, mother! did the fairies do it?" cried Tilly, pale with her happiness, as she seized the basket, while her mother took in the bundle.

"Yes, dear, the best and dearest fairy in the world, called 'Charity.' She walks abroad at Christmas-time, does beautiful deeds like this, and does not stay to be thanked," answered her mother with full eyes, as she undid the parcel.

There they were—the warm, thick blankets, the comfortable shawl, the new shoes, and, best of all, a pretty winter hat for Bessy. The basket was full of good things to eat, and on the flowers lay a paper saying:

"For the little girl who loves her neighbor as herself."

"Mother, I really think my bird is a fairy bird, and all these splendid things come from him," said Tilly, laughing and crying with joy.

It really did seem so, for as she spoke the robin flew to the table, hopped to the nosegay, and, perching among the roses, began to chirp with all his little might. The sun streamed in on flowers, bird and happy child, and no one saw a shadow glide away from the window; no one ever knew that Mr. King had seen and heard the little girls the night before, or dreamed that the rich neighbor had learned a lesson from the poor neighbor.

And Tilly's bird was a fairy bird; for by her love and tenderness to the helpless thing she brought good gifts to herself, happiness to the unknown giver of them, and a faithful little friend who did not fly away, but stayed with her till the snow was gone, making summer for her in the winter-time.

The Farm and Garden.

Potatoes.

We all have observed the great deterioration in our potato crops during the past ten or twenty years; and what is the cause of this alarming decrease of tubers? Can science, can chemistry point out the reason, or aid in remedying the difficulty? We think it can, and, in order to place the matter in a clear light, we will point out the kind and amount of food which the potato demands.

We had a field of potatoes upon the farm which yielded three hundred bushels to the acre; this may be regarded as an old-fashioned crop. This crop removed from the soil in tubers and tops at least four hundred pounds potash; also it removed one hundred and fifty pounds phosphoric acid. Now these amounts are very large, and serve to show that the potato plant is a great consumer of the two substances, and also it shews that in order to restore our potato fields to their former productive condition we must supply phosphatic compounds and substances holding potash in large quantities.

For six or eight generations in New England our fathers have been exhausting the soil by removing these agencies to their potato and other crops, and we have reached a time when the vegetable is starving in our field for want of its proper food. Our farmers have found that new land gives the best crops, and this is due to the fact that such fields afford the most potash. But so long as we crop our pastures so unreasonably we cannot resort to new land, as land is not new that has had its potash and phosphatic elements removed by grazing animals.

Remember that a potato field which gives but one hundred bushels to the acre requires at least one hundred and sixty pounds of potash, but by allowing the tops to decay upon the field, sixty pounds of this are restored to the soil again, as that amount is contained in them. A medium crop of potatoes requires twice as much phosphoric acid as a medium crop of wheat, so that in two years with wheat the land is deprived of no more of the agent than it loses in one year with potatoes.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

Onion Culture in the South.

It is not generally known that onion culture might be made extremely profitable in the Southern States, but such is the fact. Every year there is a great demand for sets, both North and South, as all the early onions must be raised from these, and sets can only be grown below the latitude of Baltimore. Above that line they mature the first year from the seed becoming what we call late annual onions.

Onion sets are simply the first year's onions, from the seed, which have been forced into formation of a small bulb by the extreme heat of the climate. The onion stops growing ere it has attained to half its natural size, but when replaced the next season, before the extreme heat sets in, it resumes its growth where it left off and soon becomes a large bulb.

Attempts are often made by gardeners in the North to grow their own onion sets, with a view to saving the considerable outlay necessary to purchase them, but all attempts have so far resulted in failure; for the onions kept on growing till they matured themselves. When means have been resorted to to dwarf them, the result has been no better; for although the product looked like set, it was found, on putting it out the next year, that it had finished its growth, and would do nothing more.

Then, as the set-growing business of this country is climatically secured to us, we ought to take advantage of it. Most of the sets now used are brought from the southern countries of Europe. If it will pay to import them under a heavy duty, it will certainly pay us to raise them for sale. Our sandy soils of the lower pine country are exactly suited to them, and as they require but little fertilizer and but little culture, there must undoubtedly be money in the business.—Mobile (Alabama) Register.

Increased Consumption of Sugar.

Though the manufacture of sugar was commenced in the West Indies early in the sixteenth century, yet its use in domestic economy did not become general in Europe or America before the beginning of the last century. In the year 1700 only 10,000 tons were used in Great Britain, though the English were at that time the leading manufacturers of sugar. The consumption of sugar in the British Islands in the year 1870 is stated at 600,000 tons. In this country the consumption of sugar is steadily increasing. Since the close of the late war the ratio of increase has been about ten per cent. annually, and in the year 1871 the sugar consumed in the United States amounted to 700,000 tons, an increase of fifteen per cent. on the preceding year. This is the largest consumption of sugar, in proportion to the population, found in any nation on the globe. A very small proportion of the sugar consumed in the United States is produced within our own territory, while in Europe the production of sugar is rapidly increasing, and bids fair soon to render the principal nations of that quarter independent of the tropical regions in regard to the supply of sugar. Since the year 1850 the production of sugar from beets in France has risen from 60,000 tons to 300,000; in Austria, from 10,000 to 80,000 tons; and Russia, where beet culture was introduced since 1850, now produces 100,000 tons of sugar. The increased consumption of sugar may be taken as the evidence of an advance toward a higher civilization.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A VALUABLE PATENT RIGHT FOR SALE.

The Rochester Riving, Shaving and Jointing Shingle Machine Patent,

for the larger portion of the State of Mississippi, is offered for sale. As an investment this offers an opportunity to a small capitalist to engage in a very desirable manufacturing business. The shingles are not only superior to the hand-made article, but can be produced at a cost of from fifty to seventy-five cents per thousand; and, being uniformly made and perfectly finished, ready to put in place without further labor on the part of the builder, they will always sell more readily, and command better prices than the hand-made; in fact, builders will find it to their interest to use them, in preference to others, from the fact that there will not only be a saving of time in laying them, but that they will run fully twenty-five per cent. further in the measurement.

The Louisiana Shingle Company, of this city, are operating under this patent, and working it with success. The machines are durably built, are not liable to get out of order, occupy but little space, and three-horse power is sufficient to drive them to their fullest capacity. Timber, either hard or soft, can be worked on them, and a machine will average, per day of ten hours, from fifteen to twenty thousand shingles. Any ordinarily intelligent man can operate it. To Whom It May Concern.

THERE ARE IN THE STATE OF TEXAS thousands of acres of Land belonging to unknown heirs of parties who went to that State at an early date, bought or located lands, and have since died, owning them. Being in possession of facts in reference to original titles of lands, that have made many wealthy who were unaware they owned a dollar in that State, we invite all parties who had relatives who emigrated there, and have since died, to open a correspondence in reference thereto. We make no charge unless successful, and, if good titles are found, expect an interest for looking them up and removing clouds from titles, etc. Parties interested will do well to address

WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

THE UNDERSIGNED OFFERS THIS Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating, instead of rubbing. It will wash sixteen shirts or twenty-five ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly wash, rinse and blue one hundred pieces ordinary clothing in forty-five minutes, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury. It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and costs less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every Machine will do as represented if the directions are followed. It is a most excellent Wool-washer likewise. Send for circular and certificates of its merits.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,

DR. HENRY'S ROOT AND PLANT PILLS.

By cleansing the blood and arousing the liver and secretive organs to a healthy action, Dr. Henry's Root and Plant Pills cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Headache, Pain in the Side, Numbness of the Hands and Feet, Dullness, Chilliness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Loss of Appetite, Bilious Dysentery, Kidney Affections, Constipation, Debility, Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Being free from mercury and other poisons, they can be taken at all times and under all circumstances, without regard to diet, business or pleasure.

They stimulate the weakened and distempered parts into healthy action, giving them strength to disburden themselves and throw off the obstructions which are the first cause of disease, without producing either nausea or griping.

All heavy and drowsy sensations, which are the forerunners of direful diseases, such as Apoplexy, Paralytic Strokes, etc., are effectually warded off by a few doses of these searching Pills.

Full directions around each box, in English, German, French and Spanish. Price, 25 Cents a Box.

POPE'S CUBE FOR
Coughs, Colds, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs.

This preparation was introduced many years ago, after consulting the views of several of the most prominent physicians of New Orleans regarding its formula. The late Dr. Edward Jenner Coxe, author of the work on Inhalations for Diseases of Respiratory Organs was pleased to say: "In my opinion, no better combination for the purpose of relieving the ordinary coughs and colds which prevail can readily be thought of." And nearly twenty years of actual trial has gone far to verify his remark. In bottles, 75 cents each. Try it. JOHN H. POPE, Druggist,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been rainy and part of the time inclement. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. There seems to be a more general disposition to put crop estimates at 3,500,000 bales, but some count on higher figures. Receipts have been curtailed by low water in the tributaries, but are now expected to be more liberal.

The river is 14 feet 7 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	16,101
Lake.....	47
Mobile.....	2,941
Tennessee.....	2,595
Texas.....	500
Total.....	22,244

On Wednesday, with dark and rainy weather and only a light supply, buyers stood aloof, and the sales were confined to 3,050 bales, partly at about previous rates, but mostly at a falling off of ⅛c., good ordinary closing at 18⅜@18¾c., low middling at 19⅛@19½c., and good middling at 20⅛@20⅜c., other grades showing no quotable change. On Thursday it continued rainy and unfavorable, but less so than on Wednesday, the movement showing a little more animation, but without much spirit. The sales embraced 4,500 bales at still easier prices, the closing rates indicating a decline of ⅛@¼c. in ordinary, good ordinary and low middling. On Friday, with a continuance of unfavorable weather, and a disposition among buyers to await more liberal supplies, the demand was limited, and the few brokers who came forward claimed a further reduction of ¼c., which factors would not admit. The sales were consequently confined to 2,250 bales, mostly at a falling off of ⅛c., but in some cases of ¼c. At the close, however, the decline was put down at ⅛c. Prices were depressed by the absence of the usual competition among buyers, as well as by discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 430,695 bales, against 357,239 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 272,856 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 40,197 to Great Britain, and an increase of 39,966 to France, and of 119,038 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The market has been steady, with a good demand at full previous prices. The receipts have not been large. They comprised 3,700 hhds. on Wednesday and Thursday, and were mostly sold at 5¼@6¼c. for inferior, 6¾@7½c. for common to good common, 7⅝@8c. for fair, 8¼@8½c. for good fair, 8¾c. for fully fair, 9¼c. for prime, 9½c. for strictly prime, 9¾@10c. for choice, 8@8½c. for seconds, 9¾@10¾c. for yellow clarified, and 10¾@11¾c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Wednesday the receipts embraced about 3,000 hhls., which were sold at 50@53c. for fair, 53@55c. for prime, 56@57c. for strictly prime, and 57@58c. for choice, the market closing at the outside figures. On Thursday about 2,600 bbls. were received, and sold at 45@50c. for common, 53@54c. for fair, 55@56c. for prime, 57@58c. for strictly prime, and 59c. for choice.

CORN.—The only sale reported was a lot of 500 sacks choice white on Wednesday, from store, at 84c. ₱ bushel. On Friday the supplies were fair on the landing, but as buyers were holding off, owing partly to the continued inclemency of the weather, the market remained inactive.

OATS.—On Wednesday the movement was confined to 200 sacks choice old Galena, in store, at 50c. ₱ bushel. On Thursday 200 sacks choice sold at 48c. On Friday the supply on the landing was light, and, though nothing of any consequence was done, prices disclosed no variation. Sales were confined to 500 sacks choice at 47c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Thursday 250 sacks sold, in one lot, at $1.25. On Friday the movement was restricted by rainy weather, and only 320 sacks were sold, but at steady prices under a light supply, the sales comprising 320 sacks in bad order from depot at $1.17, and 100 on the landing at $1.25 ₱ 100 lbs.

HAMS.—Sugar-cured continue scarce and in demand at full prices.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Thursday 200 shoulders, loose, sold on the landing at 6½c., and 5 casks shoulders, to arrive, at 5½c. ₱ lb. On Friday shoulders were retailing at 6½@6¾c., clear rib sides 8¼c., clear sides 8¾c. ₱ lb., and none in first hands; 9 casks shoulders and 5,000 lbs. do. sold on the landing at 6½c. ₱ lb.

CORN MEAL.—It has been jobbing at $3.60@3.75 ₱ bbl. On Friday 75 bbls. sold on the landing at $3.50 per bbl.

BREAKFAST BACON.—On Wednesday and Thursday 75 cases, uncanvased, sold at 9½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Friday at 111½@111¾ (against 111¾ at New York,) and closed at 111⅝@111¾ (against 111⅝ at New York.)

In silver we have noticed only retail sales, and $600 in American half dollars on Wednesday at 111. American half dollars are now quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at par to 2½ ₱ cent. premium in gold.

MEDICAL.

Popular, Safe and Efficacious,

DR. D. JAYNE'S

STANDARD FAMILY

MEDICINES.

EXPECTORANT.

Dr. Jayne's EXPECTORANT cures Coughs, Colds, Croup, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Pleurisy; is a prompt and certain palliative in Consumption, and all pulmonary and bronchial disorders, its action freeing the Lungs and Bronchial Tubes of irritating and obstructing matters, and healing the ulcerated surfaces.

TONIC VERMIFUGE.

Dr. D. Jayne's TONIC VERMIFUGE is a remedy especially adapted to cure many of the ordinary ailments of children, and to save them from much suffering. It utterly destroys Worms, the great pests of childhood, and purges the system of them. Its valuable tonic properties remove General Debility, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia, restoring a good tone to the system, and strengthening the stomach and digestive organs.

AGUE MIXTURE.

Dr. Jayne's AGUE MIXTURE is an unfailing curative for Fever and Ague, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, and all complaints of a like nature. It breaks up the chills, and assists in restoring the liver and digestive organs to a healthy condition. It also exercises a tranquillizing effect on the nerves, and has most excellent tonic properties, which enable it, when taken in conjunction with the Sanative Pills, to eradicate the disease.

SANATIVE PILLS.

Dr. Jayne's SANATIVE PILLS, known all the world over as a mild, prompt and effective purgative of established efficacy in Liver Complaint, and all Bilious affections, Headache, Disordered Stomach, Dyspepsia, Female diseases, and diseases of the Skin. In small doses they are alterative and gently laxative; in large doses actively cathartic.

MRS. M. G. BROWN'S

CELEBRATED

POOR RICHARD'S

EYE-WATER

derives its name from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac, which is immortal for its philosophical sayings, one of which is: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Giving the Eyes a drink, morning and night, of

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER

would prevent every disease which attacks the human body, thus lengthening life to an indefinite period.

The Body is of the Earth, and the Eye is a Plant, which requires moisture.

The dust received into the eyes daily works itself into mortar, which clogs the machinery of the head, and closes up the eight thousand tubes and glands around the eyes; the balls contract and sink; they grow to the socket, and consequently the revolving power is impeded. This is what causes the blood-streaks, the dark greenish color of the balls, and scum.

When the eyes are neglected the entire machinery of the face becomes distorted; even the countenance is changed. How true: "The light of the body is the eye." It is as necessary to give the eye moisture as any plant of the field.

Language fails to make known the salutary effects upon the entire mental and physical machinery arising from giving the eyes a drink of POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER, morning and night; also the fearful consequence of neglecting so to do from the cradle to the grave.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Prevents Catarrh.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures Catarrh,
Opens the 8,000 tubes and glands in the head,
Prevents tightness and pains in the head,
Opens and keeps open the mucous membrane,
Removes phlegm from throat and chest.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes Wrinkles and Blotches,
Gives large, sparkling eyes,
Gives a clear, smooth complexion,
Lifts sunken eyes,
Strengthens weak eyes.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Removes tan freckles,
Gives blooming cheeks,
Removes all inflammation,
Cures all kinds of headache,
It penetrates through the eyes into the gums
And preserves the teeth,
Gives the sweetest breath,
Opens the gates for rivers
To pass from the head into the system.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Cures tan, freckles and grubs,
Is clear and beautiful,
Same taste as the tear.

POOR RICHARD'S EYE-WATER
Restores the memory, brightens the intellect.

THE CLOUDS.

The clouds are returning after the rain,
All the long morning they steadily sweep
From the blue northwest, o'er the upper main,
In a peaceful flight to their eastern sleep.

With sails that the cool wind fills or furls,
And the shadows that darken the billowy grass,
Freighted with amber or filled with pearls,
Fleets of fair argosies rise and pass.

The earth smiles back to the smiling throng
From greening pasture and blooming field,
For the earth that had been sickened with thirst so long
Had been touched by the hand of the Rain and healed.

The old man sits 'neath the tall elm trees,
And watches the pageant with dreamy eyes,
While his white locks stir to the same cool breeze
That scatters the silver along the skies.

The old man's eyelids are wet with tears—
Tears of sweet pleasure and sweeter pain—
For his thoughts are driving back over the years
In beautiful clouds after life's long rain.

Sorrows that drowned all the springs of his life,
Trials that crushed him with pitiless bent,
Storms of temptation and tempests of strife,
Flont o'er his memory tranquil and sweet.

And the old man's spirit, made soft and bright
By the long, long rain that had bent him low,
Sees a vision of angels on wings of white,
In the trooping clouds as they come and go.

J. G. Holland.

SOME GOOD HINTS.

Thus writes "Uncle Dauvit" to the editor of the Religious Telescope:

"Ven I saihs dat I ish no grate scholar, vy, it ish chusht so; but ven I sees dings don't go rite, I chust feels as if I musht speek my mindt rite out; and I can say dat I hev been dinking on dis supjebk for years pasht, bnt vas afeard to write; so I vaits, and vaits, put nobody saish de dings vot I vants said, so I musht chusht speak myself.

"I hash took ant red de Teleschope for more as schwansich yore, and I likes to take it; bnt I sees so many bieces in it vot I don't like. Some of de breachers is all de time riten abont gitten more pay; ant it chusht looks as if de mempers of de church had called dem breachers to breach, pekaus dey are always scholting at de mempers. Now, Mishter Editor, if you bleas, I vill give you my mint abont dis ding of de breacher always telling de members dey musht pay de breachers petter; and if we don't, den dey say: 'Ve vill chusht stop a breachen, ant go into de stohr, or someding vot vill pay, ant de sheeps ant de lambs may chushtgo.' I dinks dish all ish rong; ant de more day do dish ting, vy, de more day don't get pait. But now I vill say dat if de Mashter calls de breachers to breach, he ish de embloyer, and I dinks he vill pay efry breacher vot trushts in him. Ish it not said dat: 'Lo, I am with yon alway,' etc.? Ant wot for? Not chusht to look on, but to help to breach in de Sphirit, and mit bower; and den de mempers day feels good, ant sinners feel dat de Lort ish dare, ant so de peoples all say: 'Now dish ish a good breacher; ve musht gifs him all hish pay.' Dat ish vot de Savior meens by being mit de breacher.

"But chusht now I remempers dat one off our goode bishops—dat one vot says he ish de longest bishop—vell, he rites a biese on de breachers, ant he saihs dat day musht shtay in de call. And so all de breachers say. But den, when de mempers don't cum up mit de pay, vy, den de call ish no more. If de breacher is called he must breach, pay or no pay, until de Lort gift him clear. And if de breacher does right ant de mempers are stingy, den day are not chusht rite; bnt de Mashter vill call dem up for dat.

"Now I musht glose, for my biece ish more dan de editor vill brint; and I expect it vill go vere de rich man's krums went—under de table. But den I vill not git mat, but vill take de Teleschope right on, and vill rite agin, if de breachers don't giff up writen such big dry bieces about gitten more salry."

The following is a corrected version of a story which has recently appeared in print in regard to the visit of the Emperors of Russia and Austria and the King of Prussia at Paris, in the year 1814:

Early one morning Mr. A., a well-known and popular French pastor (who is still living in a green old age,) while walking in the Bois de Bologne, was accosted by three foreigners, militaires. As they were strangers they were glad to avail themselves of the local information of the intelligent Frenchman on whom they lighted in their early walk before the great city was awake. He walked with them, as their guide, back to the vicinity of the Tuilleries, when, on his proposing to take leave, one of them said: "You may perhaps like to know the names of the strangers whom you have obliged so much by your information; I am the Emperor of the Russias." The next said: "I am the Emperor of Anstria;" and the third: "I am the King of Prussia." The young pastor, being fully persuaded that they were practicing a hoax, and, being himself a man of humor, was equal to the occasion, and, making a profound bow, said: "And I, my brothers, am the Emperor of China."

SCIENTIFIC.

The Electric Probe.—This instrument, devised by M. Tronve, a French surgeon, has an indicator at the end, containing two small steel points, insulated from each other, and connected with an electro-magnet and a vibrator, as well as with a galvanic battery. Whenever these points touch a metallic substance (such as the bullet in a wound) the electric circuit is established, and the vibrator gives a signal. It is said that lead, iron and copper can be distinguished in this way. For lead the vibrations are regular; for iron or copper they are jerky. Iron may be distinguished from copper by means of the galvanometer needle.

Sunstroke.—The cause of sunstroke must be looked for in the character of the sun's rays. The heat of the sun differs from every other heat, as the light of the sun differs from every other kind of light. This is a fact so well known as to need no demonstration. The effect of the sun's heat upon plants—as contrasted with artificial heat—is the most familiar, and perhaps the most striking illustration at hand. All animate and inanimate things are subject to precisely the same great laws of nature; and the solar heat which makes the flowers droop and close their petals, as if to shut out the dazzling rays, is not without its marvelous chemical effect upon the sensitive brain of man. The effect, we say, is chemical, just like the effect of poison.

Chloral in Cholera.—Dr. von Reichard has employed chloral in the recent epidemic of cholera at Riga—first to calm the cramps at the ontset; secondly, to lessen the præcordial anguish in the last stage; thirdly, to arrest the vomiting; fonrthly, to induce sleep, for which the patients have earnestly prayed. It has successfully fulfilled all these indications. In one case, in which the patient was in extremis, and had apparently not three hours to live, sixty grains of chloral gave calm sleep; the temperature rose; the pulse fell from one hundred and thirty to ninety, and regained a certain fullness; the facies cholerica disappeared; and the patient was, as it were, snatched from the jaws of death. Dr. Blumenthal, in three cases of severe cholera, saved two ont of three patients. The doses administered were sixty grains in half an ounce of water twice or thrice in an hour.—Berlin Clin. Wochenschrift; Gazette Med. de Strasbourg.

Fire-Clays.—It is well known that, as a general rule, all bodies are expanded by heat. Clay, however, appears to be an exception to this rule, being a mechanical mixture, and not a homogeneous body; and it was observed by Mr. Wedgwood that alumina or clay, in which alumina predominates, on being exposed to a red heat, begins to contract, and, as the heat increases, continues to contract regularly until it finally vitrifies; and so (by its permanent diminution in bulk) furnishes an approximate indication of the temperature to which it has been subjected. Fire-clays able to resist exposure to a high temperature without melting or becoming, in a sensible degree, soft and pasty, occur in various geological formations, and they abound in the coal measures in the carboniferous system. Experience justifies the general assertion that the refractory values of fire-bricks vary inversely with the amount of iron contained in them; and the presence of six per cent. of peroxide of iron warrants the absolute rejection of a fire-brick. This component usually takes the form of little black specks embedded in the material, and can be plainly detected upon breaking the brick.

Singular Phenomenon.—An account was recently published of the death of Mr. Charles Lyle, gatekeeper at Norristown, from lightning. It was then stated that no marks of the electric fluid were found upon his body. In preparing the remains for burial, however, some evidences of death by lightning were discovered. They appeared to have commenced at the left shoulder, and, taking a downward course, crossed to the right side, descending the right leg, leaving an abrasion of the skin between two of the toes. But what is quite wonderful in connection with the matter is the fact that upon the right breast was the print of a leaf found on the floor of the piazza at the dead man's feet. The leaf was from an ailanthus tree in the yard, and with the stem measured about five inches in length. The ribs, veins and cellular texture of the leaf were perfectly printed upon the skin, the whole having a red appearance. Mr. Lyle died in a sitting posture, upon a chair, and, when found, his head inclined to one side. As his clothing was not disturbed in the least, it would appear impossible for the leaf to have come in contact with the skin. In comparing the leaf found with the impression on the body the two were exactly alike in size and development.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College	$60 00
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department	40 00
Contingent expenses	5 00

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203; and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

We desire to call the attention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and after a brief usage. There are many other advantages to which we could call attention, but our space will not admit. Catalogues and Price Lists, containing full particulars of this and other popular games, mailed to any address on application. Thirteen different styles of Croquet, from $4 to $20 a set. Address

THE PATENT BRIDGE
